WHERE "TIGER" STUDIES DOG CHARACTER

Jack Bell, the "Buster Brown" Animal Impersonator, at home with dogs

"Real dogs are my models for my study. 'Just at present my dogs are guarding my grandmother. Every summer we hike back to the dog farm and Tige has the time of his life mixing up with his cronies.' Mr. Bell, 'the man behind the dog,' is twenty-seven years of age and he has acrobatic training and a skillful make-up to fit him in impersonating Tige. The dog head is a perfect net work of wires and ropes, the ends of which extend to the two blocks which form Tige's front feet. There are eight strings in the head, two of which cause the ferocious glare to which Tige frequently treats grandma, two of which operate Tige's wise wink, one to each of the sensitive ears and two to bring about the savage bearing of the teeth, with which Tige scares the tramp into fits.

"I spend every summer with them and have a lot of fun watching them." Tige picks up a whole lot of typical dog characteristics from them and add these bits to the make-up of Tige. I try to figure out just what they are thinking and try to imagine myself a dog and what I would do if I were one. So you see Tige is not a burlesque, but a real character

Protect Your Family

It is a solemn fact that thousands of explosions in kitchen hot water systems occur every year in the United States, with more or less serious results. In one little town in Connecticut of 500 inhabitants seven explosions from the same cause occurred last winter.

CAUSE OF EXPLOSION.

It was while watching a tea kettle on a kitchen stove that Watt made the discovery of the expansive force of steam. He noticed when he closed the spout of the kettle, that when the water reached the boiling point the steam thus generated blew off the cover. If the cover is made fast and there is no other escape an explosion occurs.

PREVENTION.

Do you know that every pressure boiler of any description has a safety valve, so called? Of course you know it and you know the reason why. Simply because steam, so useful when under control, is so dangerous when beyond control. The engineer does not intend to allow his steam to rise beyond a point of safety, but he has an automatic safety valve in case it does. You do not intend to have obstructions of ice, rust or anything else in the supply pipes of your kitchen boiler, but they do get there and cause damage unless you have some kind of a safety appliance.

You do not require the same safety valve that is used on the pressure boiler, but one that is simple, cheap, and not likely to get out of order. The Simplex Safety Valve is so simple that it can be attached in ten minutes time. It is made of brass and will not rust, and will last as long as the boiler itself, and if the circulation stops, the Simplex Safety Valve automatically opens and all danger of explosion and loss of life is avoided.

The fact that you never have had trouble of the kind described does not preclude the possibility of having it. You may never have lost your house by fire, but you carry fire insurance. Why? Because it is a matter of common knowledge that houses do burn down. The same publicity is not given to the breaking of a water back or boiler as to the burning of a house, and if you do not know personally of the frequency of broken water backs, ask your plumber. Insure against the possibility of an explosion in your home by equipping your hot water system with some kind of safety appliance. The Simplex Safety Valve will give you this insurance. We are sole agents for the Simplex Safety Valve in Clarksburg.
