Cavanagh, Forest Ranger

The Great Conservation Novel

By HAMLIN GARLAND

Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland

She heard a good deal more about this particular forest ranger next morning at breakfast. "He is throwing himself away," Mrs. Redfield passionately declared. "Think of a man of Ross' refinement living in a mountain shack miles from anybody, watching poachers, marking trees and cooking his own food! It's a shameful waste of genius."
"That's as you look at it, my dear," responded Redfield. "Ross is the guardian of an immense treasure chest which belongs to the nation. Furthermore, he is quite certain, as I am, that this forest service is the policy of the future and that it offers the chances for promotion and, often, finality he likes it."

THE TOUCH OF IT MADE FURTHER SPEECH IMPOSSIBLE.

"That is all well enough for a young man," but there is at least one thing that should be thinking of before he goes down. I don't understand his point of view."
"My dear, you have never seen the procession of the seasons from such a point of view as that which he enjoys."
"No, and I do not care to." It is quite lonely enough for me right here," Mrs. Redfield looked at Lee with a certain blankness. "Mrs. Redfield is hopelessly urban. As the wife of a forest supervisor she cares more for game laws and trappers than for the most splendid mountain park."
"I most certainly do," his wife vigorously agreed, "and if I had my way we should be living in London."
"Listen to that! She's ten times more English than Mrs. Enderby."
"I'm not, but I long for the civilized instead of the wild. I like comfort and society."
"So do I," returned he.
"Yes; the comfort of an easy chair on the porch and the society of your forest rangers. This ranch life is all very well for a summer outing, but to be tied down here all the year round is to be denied one's birthright as a modern."
All this more or less cheerful complaint expressed the minds of many others who live amid these superb scenes. When autumn comes, when the sky is gray and the peaks are hid in mist, they long for the music, the lights, the comfort of the city. But when the April sun begins to go down in a smother of crimson and flame and the mountains loom with epic dignity, or when at dawn the air is like some divine flood descending from the unstained mysterious heights, then the dweller in the foothills cries out: "How fortunate we are! Here are health and happiness! Here poverty is unknown!"
Mrs. Redfield was becoming more and more interested in Virginia, who had not merely the malodorous reputation of her mother to contend with, but the memory of a traitorous step to live down, and when the girl went to her room to pack her bag, the wife turned to her husband and said:
"Ross is terribly smitten with her."
Redfield coughed miserably. "I hope not. Of course he admires her, as any man must. She's physically attractive, very attractive, and, besides, Ross is as susceptible as a cowpuncher. He was deeply impressed the first time he saw her; I could see that."
"I didn't like his going out on the veranda with her last night," continued Mrs. Redfield, "and when they came in her eyes and color indicated that he'd been saying something exciting to her. Hugh, Ross Cavanagh must not get involved with that girl. It's your duty as his superior to warn him."
"He's fully grown, my dear, and a bit dictatorial on his own part. I'm a trifle timid about cutting in on his private affairs."
"They'll do it. Marriage with a girl like that is out of the question. Think what his sisters would say!"
Redfield smiled a bit satirically. "To the outsider a forest ranger at $300 a year and find himself and horses is not what you may call a brilliant catch."
"Oh, well, the outsider is no judge! Ross Cavanagh is a gentleman, and, besides, he's sure to be promoted. I acknowledge the girl's charms, and I don't understand it. When I think of her objectively as Miss Wetherford's girl I wonder at her being in my house. When I see her I want her to stay with me. I want to hug her."

"Perhaps we're being unjust to Lize all along," suggested Redfield. "She has remained faithful to Ed Wetherford's memory all these years—that is conceded. Doesn't that argue some unusual quality? How many women do we know who are capable of such loyalty? Come, now! Lize is a rough piece of goods, I'll admit, and her lunch counters was a public nuisance, but she had the courage to send her girl away to be educated, denying herself the joy of seeing her develop by her side. We shouldn't permit our prejudices to run away with us."
"The girl's return put a stop to the discussion, which could end in nothing but confusion anyway."

CHAPTER IX. THE DOCTOR SEES LIZE.

LEE VIRGINIA said goodby to Mrs. Redfield with grateful appreciation of her kindness, and especially of her invitation to come again. And the tears in her eyes profoundly affected the older woman, who, with a friendliness which was something more than politeness, invited her to come again. "Whenever you're in town, my dear, we'll be very glad to rescue you," she said in parting.
Hugh Redfield the girl thoroughly understood and loved, he was so simple hearted and so loyal. On the way to the office he said to Lee, "I will talk to the doctor if you like."
"I wish you would," she responded fervently.
She remained in the machine while he went in, and as she sat there a train passed on the downward eastward track, and revealing to her a glimpse of happiness, filled her heart. Now that she was within sight of the railway the call of the east, the temptation to escape all her discomforts, was almost great enough to carry her away, but into her mind came the thought of the larger riding her face to her own duties once more, comforted by the words of praise he had spoken and by the blaze of admiration in his eyes.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS

The Man of the Hour. George Broadhurst's great American play will be the attraction at the Grand Saturday afternoon and night. The engagement is one of the most important of the season. The play concerns modern city life with flesh and blood characters of types familiar in every day life. A large company is employed in the presentation, the more prominent characters being in the hands of Joseph Harris, Chas. H. Ellwood, Harry J. Oehler, L. C. Phillips, Charles Drake, Edward Riley, Fred Reynolds, Walter Carter, Richard Hogan, John P. Daly, M. J. Underwood, Frank Weston, Peter Dugan, Georgia Brantley, Edna Lyman, and Marie Casmere.
All is theatrical will lead to the Grand next Monday night, the date set for the first appearance in this city of that laughable and sensationally successful French importation, "The Girl in the Taxi," which comes with the enviable reputation of being the greatest entertainment concocted for the purpose of enjoyment ever produced on any stage. Actors of the best reputations as comedians of the first rank compose the company which will be seen when the piece makes its bow for local approval.
It is said that "The Lion and the Mouse" was partly responsible for

How to Have the Best Cough Syrup and Save $2 by Making it at Home.

Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large quantity of plain syrup. If you take one pint of granulated sugar, add 1/2 pint of warm water, and stir about 2 minutes, you have as good syrup as money could buy.

If you will then put 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle, and fill it up with the Sugar Syrup, you will have as much cough syrup as you could buy ready-made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly.

And you will find it the best cough syrup you ever used—even in whooping cough. You can feel it take hold—usually stops the most severe cough in 24 hours. It is just laxative enough, has a good tonic effect and taste is pleasant. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

It is a splendid remedy, too, for hoarseness, asthma, chest pains, etc. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in gualic acid and all the healing pine elements. No other preparation will work in this formula.

This recipe for making cough remedy with Pinex and Sugar Syrup is now used and prized in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada. The plan has often been imitated but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Roosevelt going after the trust's in his vigorous way and that he and Mr. Klein had considerable personal correspondence on the matter. If such be the case, and the further claim that Commissioner Bingham, of the New York police, was ousted after the "Third Degree," also by Mr. Klein, was launched, is substantiated, then those unfortunates who suffer through the hoarding of money by the few will have to look forward to Mr. Klein and his pen for further relief from political evils. "The Third Degree" will be presented at the Grand in the near future.

George Sydney's new musical farce, "The Joy Rider," was the attraction at the Grand opera house Wednesday night, and on the strength of his previous successes the house was entirely sold out. "The Joy Rider" was the same inimitable "Busy Jazzy" and Miss "Carrie" Webber as Merril Lee was excellent, and Dick Hume as the detective was extremely funny. The costumes were pretty, as also were the girls, and the novelty motion pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson pig-fight created much laughter. The play was pleasing and amusing from start to finish.

NEW WAY

Of Holding Elections is Tried by Town in Randolph County.

An unusual method of conducting an election was that employed at Mill Creek in Randolph county, when the town officers were chosen last week. No names appeared on the ballots and the voters cast their ballot for any man in the city qualified to hold an office.

Because of an oversight on the part of some one the election had not been advertised as the law requires and consequently no tickets representing a party could appear on the ballot. The result was that a blank ballot was used and every voter was permitted to write the name of any one he pleased thereon for any office to be filled.

E. L. Johnson was the announced candidate for mayor to succeed L. E. Shull, who had held the office two terms, but who had announced he did not have the time to devote to the office again. However, when the votes were counted he was re-elected.
