An Evening Echo.

The greatest chastisement that a man may receive who hath outraged another, is to have done the outrage; and there is no man who is so rudely punished as he that is subject to the whip of his own repentance.—SENECA.

The Exponent is showing its hand at last. After being gloved with silence many months, it takes hold of a pair of scissors and copiously clips from the Fairmont Times, dominated and subsidized by the Democratic state machine, and uses the clipping in an editorial attempting to defend the Democratic legislature for not enacting a primary election bill. That act alone shows where the Exponent stands.

Why did the Democratic House of Delegates shut up shop and run home so hurriedly, when it ascertained that the Senate was on the verge of accepting and passing the vital features of a primary election bill passed by the House? The manipulators of the House were evidently afraid that the modified bill might break the ranks of the Democratic state machine in the lower legislative hall and thereby become a law. To prevent this as well as to keep all primary election legislation off the statute books, the Democratic House unconsciously made a bee line for home.

Legislation Needed.

It is deplorable that legal restrictions and tax limitations are such that no new school buildings can be erected in the Clarksburg school district this year. The board of education instituted a movement to bond the district, if the people said so by their votes, but in its examination of the school law, it found that a bond issue could not be of an advantageous size and the question has been dropped temporarily.

All who read the report made by Superintendent Burdette to the Board of Trade at its annual meeting must be impressed with the pressing needs along school lines. It is hoped that agitation will crystallize into effective legislation at the next session of the legislature.

Wilson on Bachelors.

In his swing about the western circle Governor Woodrow Wilson discussed a great number of public questions and made a number of observations that should set people to thinking, but not many people will be willing to admit that he expressed a divine thought when he said he considered that bachelors made the best legislators, declares the Boston Globe. The reason why he thinks bachelors make the best lawmakers presumably is because they have more time to give to public duties.

We venture to say that married men are just as good lawmakers as bachelors, and we will almost wager that they are better. The bachelor may be care free, but it does not follow that he spends his time any more profitably than the yoked brother. The married man has no illusions, while the bachelor may be surrounded by them. No statistics have ever been compiled to demonstrate the pre-eminent public service of the single man, and we, therefore, ask Governor Wilson to explain his piousness or disclaim the assertion.

Health and the Resorts.

It is generally conceded that the chief reason why health resorts are beneficial to health is that the people who go to them follow a certain prescribed code of rules calculated to restore them and keep them in good physical condition, says the Omaha Bee. If they would observe the same system of living at their homes they probably would not have to go to the resorts. As a rule the resorts are in the same latitude and altitude as their resident places and differ in no material respect except that their managers have reduced to a science the method of daily living and are able to get people to adopt their methods.

This is saying nothing against the resorts, nor that they are not useful and helpful places. They are, because people will not do without them. A busy man, for instance, so long as he stays at home, where he is thrown in daily contact with his business, is going to pursue the same old routine each day, and, if he is suffering from nervous disorder, of course he is not likely to make much improvement. He has to be removed from his work before he will do what is necessary to build him up. The resort is the city of refuge to him. He goes there, follows out a certain routine for a few days or weeks and returns all sound and ready for another tug at business.

Change in Advertising.

Many interesting things can be pointed out in the history of the advertising business. From what was formerly regarded as a sort of charitable contribution to aid a struggling publication, the business has in a comparatively few years developed into an essential part of commercialism. Modern merchants who are the most successful would as soon do away with a system of bookkeeping as they would a system of advertising. The Wheeling Intelligencer turns attention to a notable change in the form of advertising, which has resulted from practical experience.

All the business men can recall a form of advertising that was very prevalent about ten to twenty years ago.

The idea was to fool a reader against his will to peruse an advertisement. It was assumed that the reader was hostile to all advertising and that the only way to get him to read it was to perpetrate a fraud.

The practical result was to anger the reader at so childish a deception, and few goods were sold in that fashion.

The big dry goods merchants were the leaders in modern advertising. They were early with the discovery that the public does not have to be cajoled, teased or defrauded in order to get advertising read. They found, on the contrary, that the public was eagerly turning to the advertising to get its questions answered, that the man who did not answer those questions was slighted, and the man who did answer them got the business.

The public does not turn to advertising for wit, humor or monkey capers. It simply asks a merchant to tell about some of his most attractive offerings, to describe them so clearly that they can know just about what they are and what they will cost.

The department store men have built up their great business by recognizing that the public wants the news of their stores, and it is governed in its purchases by the presentation of that news in the advertising. They found out that the store that does not advertise is as much out of the game as the newspaper that should print articles out of the encyclopedia on its first page.

Where the Blame Lies.

Who was it that tried to defer action on and in fact to kill primary election legislation? No one can truthfully say it was the governor. All know better than that. Was it the fifteen Republican state senators and one or two Democratic state senators? Everyone acquainted with the course of the fifteen Republicans and the Democrat or two knows it was not they?

Did the great majority of the Republicans in the House of Delegates and five or six Democratic members try to prevent such legislation? They did not.

Who then are the guilty ones? First, the Democratic state machine is among the guilty, and, next the machine's hirelings and serfs in the legislature are guilty. There is no mistaking these two well known and fully established facts.

Review the action of the Democratic machine part of the legislature and you will be more than ever convinced. The first resolution in the House to the effect that it was the sense of the House that it proceed to the enactment of a primary election law was defeated by state Democratic legislators. The House became afraid of its own judiciary committee, whose duty it was to frame a primary election bill, and it immediately provided for a larger and more cumbersome committee and the Democratic speaker was careful to put twice as many anti-primary election members on the committee as he did members favoring such legislation. That was another step in disregarding the will of the people.

But neither one of these steps deterred the fifteen Republican senators and one or two Democratic senators from proceeding along the line of legislating a primary election law. The work of these senators progressed to the extent of causing a more determined effort than ever on the part of the Democratic House to take another step to stop the work of the those state senators and to put to sleep soundly the movement for primary election legislation. That step was the adoption of the Gilkeson resolution by the House to raise a committee of five members to frame an act on primary election legislation and report the same to the legislature in 1913. The Democratic House and the subsidized press of the Democratic state machine gave as their reason for the creation of such a committee that a fair and honest primary election bill could not be drawn at an extra session. The Senate refused to concur in any of the actions of the House mentioned here, and the Democratic House found itself strictly up against the real thing. With a quick somersault the House introduced the French-Dice bill with the fatal referendum clause in it and the Democratic state machine press immediately turned turtle and yelled vociferously that it was a great bill and would make a good and wise law. Here, again, the Democratic legislature under the lash of the state machine confessed its opposition to primary legislation, but to deceive the people, if possible, it drafted a bill and inserted a clause that would stay the action of the people on two of the most important features and it also embodied clauses to deprive a large number of honest citizens of their votes.

This done, the Democratic House thought it had the bull by the horns, but the Senate proceeded to modify the Democratic bill so as to make it honest and operative at once. No sooner had the House ascertained this fact than it hurriedly adjourned sine die without the slightest regard whatever for the will of the upper body or the people of the state and thus forced the Senate to adjourn sine die too. The House to save the Democratic state machine, as it thought, had run to the end of its race. So, it shut up shop and ran home without giving the people what they so much desire.

Thus, one easily sees who is responsible for the failure to enact a primary election law.

BOWLING

Tournament is Attracting Attention of Many Pin Artists.

FAIRMONT, W. Va., June 3.—At the Temple bowling alleys last night, King and Keener, of Uniontown, Pa., took first place in doubles, having the nice score of 669. Keener was the star bowler, having an average of 120 for three games.

About twenty bowlers from Uniontown were here, but pins were falling hard for them, and King and Keener were the only two to get in the money.

This afternoon and evening some Frank Pittsburg bowlers will try to carry on the honors and also the cash, while two more teams from Uniontown will try to beat the high scores.

Following are Friday's scores in singles and doubles, and the five leading teams and individuals in each:
