GEORGIANS ARE VERY SOCIABLE

And Their Hospitality is Not Excelled Anywhere.

(By W. M. M.)

MOUNT CLARE, Oct. 25.—When I wrote my last letter I was stopping off a few days with my aged brother who lives with his son, W. C. Morris, near Lumpkin, Ga. This family had moved to South East Florida three years ago, and had acquired property there; but being in a malarial district, the family had contracted that disease and they sought relief in the higher altitude of Georgia where they seem to have found relief from the malaria.

I write this letter after arriving home for the purpose of telling your readers something of the social characteristics of the Georgians, as well as their manner of computing the acreage of their farms, which seemed very amusing to be.

As to their social habits, and their hospitality, I doubt if they can be surpassed by any people of our great country. Let me say first that they still retain the more primitive custom of speaking to everyone they meet whether in county or in town. The friendly hand shake is a leading feature of their social life, and having been a "yankee" soldier in the Civil war does not bar him from these social relations. When I left home I left my O. A. R. button in a conspicuous place in the lapel of my coat with a view of recognition by any of the G. A. R. veterans whom I might chance to meet, but I was surprised to find that little bronzed button to be to me a safe passport through the very heart of the Old Confederacy.

Lumpkin is the county seat of Frederic county, Ga., and their circuit court was in session which brought many of their prominent citizens into the town. I noticed that every man whom I met of an elderly appearance wore a Confederate badge, which many of you know is a bronze maltese cross suspended by a pin much like our G. A. R. badges, (not buttons.) Now I want you to note that every one of those old vets upon noticing my little button would come up to me and extend the hand—always asking my name; from what state and organization I had belonged, saying they were always glad to meet an old veteran with a badge, which they thought denoted courage, and they had no use for a coward.

After one had met me he would call to another to whom he would give me a formal introduction; then to another and he to another until I would find myself surrounded by a whole squad of ex-Confeds. I remarked to one group that the time had been, when, if I had been surrounded by so many "rebs" I would have been uneasy. Some of those did seem anxious that I should "capitulate" and share the hospitalities of their homes.

Upon stopping at hotels in Georgia or Alabama, the same courtesy was shown me on account of that little button, which they declared entitled me to the best they could do for me. This part of Georgia, (which I had not seen when I first wrote,) is one of the cotton belts of the state, and

FROM TEXAS.

Some Coffee Facts From the Lone Star State.

From a beautiful farm down in Texas, where gushing springs unite to form babbling brooks that wind their sparkling way through flowery meads, comes a note of gratitude for delivery from the coffee habit.

"When my baby boy came to me five years ago, I began to drink Postum, having a feeling that it would be better for him and me than the old kind of drug-laden coffee. I was not disappointed in it, for it enabled me, a small delicate woman, to nurse a bouncing, healthy baby 14 months."

"I have since continued the use of Postum for I have grown fond of it, and have discovered to my joy that it has entirely relieved me of a bilious habit which used to prostrate me two or three times a year, causing much discomfort to my family and suffering to myself."

"My brother-in-law was cured of chronic constipation by leaving off coffee and using Postum. He has become even more fond of it than he was of the old coffee."

"In fact the entire family, from the latest arrival, (a 2-year-old who always calls for his 'potie' first thing in the morning) up to the head of the house, think there is no drink so good or so wholesome as Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

though the cotton picking season had been on for nearly two months, much yet remained to be picked, though most of the fields had been picked over once, and some twice. The cotton crop was said to be a heavy one this year in spite of the exceedingly dry weather of the last three months. A large cotton gin is located in Lumpkin, as well as a large market house, and so fast is the crop being ginned and put on the market that the prices of cotton had fallen from $75 per bale October 1 to $45 per bale last week. But this decline will not affect the price of cotton goods. Now I have come to the most amusing part of the letter. In a conversation with one of the large planters he told me of the large number of bales of cotton, and bushels of corn he had raised, I remarked that he must have a very large farm. "I have a thirteen mule farm," he replied. "What do I understand by that?" I ventured to ask. "We reckon our acreage by the mule capacity it takes to run it." "Now if I had only one mule I would be supposed to have a 40 acre crop out; if two mules 80 acres, and so on; as each mule is supposed to till 40 acres of cotton." "Now as I have thirteen mules at work I am supposed to have 520 acres in cotton." "I have a hired man for each mule, so each man and mule has his forty acre plot laid off." "How many hours constitute a day's work on the plantations here?" I asked. "We work from sun to sun; that is they are expected to be in the field ready for work at sunup, and work until sunset. The care of the mules comes before and after the day's work begins." "What wages do you pay for the labor of these men?" I asked. "I pay them from $9 to $11 per month and feed," was his reply. "How can you manage to keep a supply of hands at such prices and such long days?" was my next question. "O that's easy enough; the laws of Georgia prohibit an employe from leaving his employer while in his debt, and I can easily manage to keep them niggers in my debt." One of them did leave me this fall owing me $2. I had him arrested, lodged in jail and fined $25 and costs, which I paid and put him back to work, which insures me his work for a long time to come before he gets even with me."

"But is not that virtually holding them in slavery?" I asked. "Well no; they can have their liberty by working out of debt," was his answer. "But," I interjected, "is it not hard to keep out of your debt at such wages?" "That depends upon the size of his family, but the women and children are often employed in cotton picking, which helps them along very much."

I narrate this conversation, that the laborers of our state who are making five times that amount for half the hours, may have occasion to rejoice that such conditions do not prevail here, but I do not wish to cast the impression that this instance represents the general condition of the negro laborer in the South. The most of the cotton plantations are operated by the negro upon shares; the owner of the farm generally residing in the towns, while the operator lives on the farm, and is in full control of his own labor; and many of them are doing well; and some of them have acquired farms of their own.

I noticed also that most of the colored families have their driving family mules and buggies.
