After the Jubilee for Emperor William of Germany Next Year.

BERLIN, Sept. 23.—The twenty-fifth jubilee of Emperor William's accession to the throne, to be celebrated next year, will be marked, it is understood, by a change in the portrait of the emperor on all the gold and silver coins of the monarchy. The present likeness dates from the accession of his majesty, and accordingly shows him as a young man. The new design will be distinguished from the old not only in regard to age but also by the fact that the neck and the chest shown in the portrait, now bare in classic nakedness, will be clad in uniform, probably that of the Guard Cuirassiers with its high-collared tunic.

An automatic device for keeping a check on locomotive engineers who run by danger signals is being installed on the government railroads. The search for a practical method of stopping automatically a train running by a signal set against it has here, as in other countries, not yet been successful, but the new invention is expected to put such a penalty on carelessness, which is given as the cause in a great number of cases, that accidents of this nature will be reduced to a minimum.

The device consists of an electric connection with the rails at semaphore points, so arranged that if an engineer does not stop when the signal is set against him a bell starts ringing at the next station and a record is automatically made upon a sealed register deposited there. As soon as the engineer reaches the station he is called upon for a written explanation, the number and sealed register insuring that no offender escapes through favoritism or negligence of the station master, who must turn in an account for every number on the record.

Under the old system an engineer might run by scores of danger signals and evade detection until his train met with an accident. Now he faces the certainty of punishment and possible discharge, which, in the opinion of the railroad officials, will operate against the relaxation of vigilance on the part of the engine crew.

Gigantic and unparalleled plumbing operations to plug leaks in the bed of the river Danube form the subject of a controversy between the governments of Baden and Wurtemberg, which has just been appealed to the Imperial Bundesrat for settlement. The case attracts attention to the curious and almost unknown geographical fact that a branch of the Danube flows into the Rhine and thus finally reaches the

WATCHING SUIT.
WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 23.—Samuel Untermyer, attorney for the money trust inquiry of the House and for the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in the fight against the Standard Oil Company, conferred with the president at the White House today. He reports that the government is watching developments in the Waters-Pierce suit.
It is beginning to dawn upon many people that the real reason "bargain-hunters" can usually afford to buy things is because they ARE bargain-hunters!

DECAYED

Teeth as Much Source of Disease with Masses as Tuberculosis Is.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Dr. C. Adolphus Knopf, before the Fifteenth international Congress on Hygiene and Demography today, speaking on the topic "Dental Hygiene for the Pupils of Public Schools", declared bad and decayed teeth were a disease of the masses as much as tuberculosis, and as such must be combated particularly in children of school age.

After making an estimate that at least three per cent of all the children of school age of the United States were tuberculous, and calling attention to the last report of the commissioner of education that there were 20,000,000 children attending public schools in the country, Dr. Knopf declared there must be at least 600,000 tuberculous children in urgent need of open air instruction. He quoted a nestimate that the average life of the 50,000 children who die annually from tuberculosis in the United States was about seven and one half years. Figuring the cost to the parents and community at only $250 per annum, he said the financial loss thus represented was $75,000,000 and children have died before they have been able to give any return to their parents or the community.

Stores COMPETE, in these days, as never before! They compete in price-concessions, as always; they compete in SERVICE—and that is the never better competition. And a vital and essential part of a store's service to its patrons is its enterprise in telling them its store news promptly, fully, frankly.

North Sea, thousands of miles from the Black Sea, where the main course of the Danube ends. For some two or three hundred years a part of the Danube has been passing through a subterranean channel from the vicinity of the little town of Immendingen, in Baden, emerging again in the valley of the River Aach, some seven miles distant, where it forms the largest spring in Germany. The source of the spring was definitely established some years ago by artificially coloring the water of the Danube above Immendingen. In recent years establishments depending on the running waters of the Danube have been increasingly serious for the towns lying on the Danube in Wurtemberg, Aach. Civil engineers propose to settle the problem by carrying a surface channel from the Danube to the Aach and building several dams on the upper course of the latter to develop electrical power. The holes in the bed of the Danube would then be filled with cement, the total cost of the operation being estimated at not much more than $1,000,000.

OUR FIRST SERIOUS TALK OF THE SEASON ON FALL SUITS

The selling of clothing isn't a laughing matter with us. It's serious business! To buy thousands upon thousands of dollars worth of men's garments involves a risk. We have always believed that in looking after our own interest, we look after yours—that's frank talk, straight from the heart, candid and not candied. The repeated assertions of some clothiers that convey the idea that they're in business for your benefit is sickening to us. We're in business for our benefit—we want you to understand that first, last and all the time. But (and in this we have little or no competition) we resolve that to sell you the most for the least is the best paying proposition we can adopt. As man to man, honestly, openly, truthfully, we have assorted here, this season a collection of Men's Garments that haven't a counterpart in this town. We have priced them not only fair to ourselves, but fair to you. You're going to enjoy choosing your Fall Suit this season at our store, because the selection is so bright, clever and brimful of dash. Today would be a good time.
