FRIDAY, JANUARY 10, 1913.

An Evening Echo. Men are led away from threatening destruction; a hand is put into theirs, which leads them forth gently toward a calm and bright land, so that they look no more backward; and the hand may be a little child's.—GEORGE ELIOT.

River cities in West Virginia will scarcely come under the "dry" class absolutely after the prohibition amendment goes into effect, unless that puts an end to floods.

Although George A. Laughlin came very close to running ahead of John W. Davis for Congress recently, Mr. Laughlin's political actions since the election indicate that he was really running backwards in the last campaign. He was supposed to be the Republican nominee with the endorsement of the Progressives. His recent Progressive activities teach that he should have been known as the Progressive nominee endorsed by the Republicans.

"Child Enemies." According to Dr. L. M. Powers, the city health inspector of Los Angeles, Calif., there are thirteen "child enemies" in that state. He tells who they are and where they live, as follows:

- 1. Doctors who do not report their cases of contagious diseases.
2. Dirty milkmen.
3. Elites.
4. Tubercular cows.
5. Persons who conceal contagious diseases.
6. Hokey-dokey men.
7. Reckless automobile speeders.
8. Violators of quarantine.
9. Manufacturers of adulterated candies.
10. Manufacturers of adulterated foods.
11. Child slavers.
12. Parsimonious taxpayers who place the hoarding of money above measures for the protection of child-life.
13. Mothers who needlessly deprive their babies of mother's milk.
This list, as Dr. Powers says, is worthy of study, particularly since many of the "enemies" named are not only of the child but equally of the adult, and the enemies against which all society should do battle.

Wrath and Righteousness.

Wrath has taken possession of the Parkersburg State Journal for reasons not very apparent, unless it be as intimated by that newspaper that it has been seeing and hearing things. Its wrath has caused it to assume an alleged righteousness and it is now ready to chastise even such an august body as the legislature of this state. Read here what is coming out of the mouth of its editor, an explosion of mentality equal in degree to the executed plots of the dynamite conspirators.

The West Virginia legislature should have organized in regular session today, but it did not. It is conducting itself in such a way, that if it were not such a serious matter to the people of the state, it would be a general laughing stock. The worst of the whole matter is there seems no prospect of the whole improper, and it might be said, infamous state of affairs ending. Further there is more dirty gossip and low scandal abroad in connection with the assembling of the so-called lawmakers, than there used to be in five years.

It is scarcely necessary to say the taxpayers of West Virginia are getting mighty tired of the petty politics and "gentleman's agreements" of the legislature. It is time, good and ripe, for the present one to organize. The general public do not care a picky name who is president of the Senate, whether he is a Democrat or a Republican. What they want is for the legislature to go ahead with its business, get home as soon as possible and stay there as long as it can.

Simple justice demands too, that it be said the main responsibility rests with the Republicans. They have everything to lose and nothing to gain by the folly and shame of the whole matter. They will be held responsible for the cost of all this foolishness. They will not elect a United States senator if there is no organization. So, let the Democrats have the little one-horse presidency. Hatfield is not going to die and there will be no Democratic governor.

The whole situation is summed up in saying the Republicans have to concede a good deal to the Democrats in the Senate or do worse. Of course they should not permit themselves to be trampled in the dust, but yielding the presidency of the Senate is not doing that. The Democrats had to do that two years ago when the shoe was on the other foot. Why is it that a lot of men supposed to have at least horse sense, can not see how it all is?

Maine's Manner.

Pointing out the fallacy of disunion and urging methods of reunion in party affairs in this state, the Blue-field Telegraph cites Maine as an example to be followed. The Telegraph says: By entering the Republican caucus and pleading reasonable co-operation with the Republican regulars the Progressive party representatives in Maine have practically turned their backs to the hysterical or resentful division of the last election. There has been a craftily calculated exaggeration of the actual division in the aims for good government and social welfare of the men composing the vast majority of the Republican party. The re-union of Maine is a signal recognition of this fact and of the substantial reasons for political affiliation.

What is evident in Maine by a right-forward representative action has appeared in a number of city elections in various states this month. Creditable Republican nominees have been generally supported and it is a rare exception when the parade of antagonism has been insisted upon. If there are any fruits except sour grapes to be plucked by disunion, they are not visible.

Bread.

The value of different kinds of bread has been discussed for many years and from various points of view since the days of Sylvester Graham. This temperance reformer of the early part of the nineteenth century based his cure for alcoholism on certain radical changes in diet, laying special stress on abstinence from meats, and the use of bread made from unbolted wheat meal. Hence the names "graham flour" and "graham bread."

Wheat deserves the wide-spread consideration which has been given it. It easily ranks first among the food products at our disposal, although rice probably forms the staple food for a larger proportion of the human race. The wheat kernel is made up of a number of parts which experience different treatment in the various milling processes in the preparation of flour.

When the grain is crushed the meal contains coarse particles of bran, the outer coverings of the seed. Bread made from such wheat meal will contain all of the nutrients of the original wheat; but the bread will be coarse in texture, dark in color, and rather strong in flavor. Graham flour or wheat meal is usually made from soft winter wheat. Sifting wheat meal to remove the coarse particles was the first step toward the making of white flour, the use of which has rapidly increased with the progress of the years. The advent of the roller process methods of milling has continued the essential feature of the earlier schemes in separating the bran from the interior of the grain; but it has materially improved the bread flours in common use until the standard flours from hard wheat carry more protein than almost any graham flour in the market thirty years ago, and as much as many now offered for sale. Newer methods of agriculture have assisted in increasing the gluten content of wheat flour through the altered composition of the newer varieties of the cereal.

The most reliable experiments made from the different types of hour show that standard patent process flour contains more available nutrition and energy than either graham or whole wheat flour. Those facts have lately been supplemented by English statistics. They show that with respect to the availability of their total energy the breads differ little; with regard to the protein there is slight advantage on the side of the white bread. So far as digestibility is concerned, says the Journal of the American Medical Association, there is no justification for extreme statements as to the advantages possessed by different kinds of bread of the commoner types. The gratifying fact is that flour of all kinds is an economical food even at the present prices.

These Great Mid Winter Sales On Every Tongue

For Their Originality, Their Savings, Their Merchandise Excellence And Their Service

Hot air is appreciated by all in cold weather, but plain facts are eagerly sought after by all economical women at any season of the year--

The White Sale In Particular

is being kept advertised by the people who are buying it. Women tell us every day now that they have been told by their friends who have already bought here, that you simply can't get undermuslins so good or so dainty anywhere but at Watts-Lamberd's. One of its notably different features is its extra-sized underclothes. It isn't merely because of their soft sheer materials and refined laces and embroideries that they are genuinely extra sized. Nightgowns are nearly as wide across the hips as at the foot, and the armholes are large and easy; corset-covers are large in the waist and armholes. Whatever the spot that usually pinches in any garment that is the spot where we have insisted on the most generous measurements. As to regular-sized undermuslins, people out of town may like to know that we have plenty of corset-covers and drawers at 25c and 49c and night gowns at 49c.
