Seven Keys TO Baldpate

CHAPTER II.

Alone on Baldpate Mountain.

"This ain't exactly regular," Mr. Quimby protested. "No, it ain't what you might call a frequent occurrence. I'm glad to do anything I can for young Mr. Bentley, but I can't help wondering what his father will say. And there's a lot of things you haven't took into consideration."

"There certainly is, young man," remarked Mrs. Quimby, bustling forward. "How are you going to keep warm in that big barn of a place?"

"The suits on the second floor," said Mr. Magee, "are, I hear, equipped with drop-lights. Mr. Quimby will keep me supplied with fuel from the forest primer, for which service he will receive $20 a week."

"And light?" asked Mrs. Quimby. "For the present, candles. I have forty in that package. Later, perhaps, you can find me an oil lamp. Oh, everything will be provided for."

"Well," remarked Mr. Quimby, looking in a dazed fashion at his wife. "I'll reckon I'll have to talk it over with ma."

The two retired to the next room, and Mr. Magee fixed his eyes on a "God Bless Our Home" motto while he awaited their return. Presently they reappeared.

"Was you thinking of eating?" inquired Mrs. Quimby sarcastically, "while you stayed up there?"

"Certainly was," smiled Mr. Magee. "For the most part I will prepare my own meals from cans and—er—jars—and such pagan sources. But now and then you, Mrs. Quimby, are going to send me something cooked as no other woman in the county can cook it. I can see it in your eyes. In my poor way I shall try to repay you."

He continued to smile into Mrs. Quimby's broad, cheerful face. Mr. Magee had the type of smile that moves men to part with ten until Saturday and women to close their eyes and dream of Sir Lancelot.

"It's all fixed," he cried. "We'll get on splendidly. And now—for Baldpate inn."

"Not just yet," said Mrs. Quimby. "I ain't one to let anybody go up to Baldpate inn unfed. I s'pose we're sort of responsible for you while you're up here. You just set right down and I'll have your supper hot and smoking on the table in no time."

Mr. Magee entered into no dispute on this point, and for half an hour he was the pleased recipient of advice, philosophy and food. When he had assured Mrs. Quimby that he had eaten enough to last him the entire two months he intended spending at the inn Mr. Quimby came in, attired in a huge "before the war" ulster and carrying a lighted lantern.

"So you're going to sit up there and write things," he commented. "Well, I reckon you'll be left to yourself, all right."

"I hope so," responded Mr. Magee. "I want to be so lonesome I'll sob myself to sleep every night. It's the only road to immortality. Goodby, Mrs. Quimby. In my fortress on the mountain I shall expect an occasional culinary message from you." He took her plump hand. This motherly little woman seemed the last link binding him to the world of reality.

"Goodby," smiled Mrs. Quimby. "Be careful of matches."

Mr. Quimby led the way with the lantern, and presently they stepped out upon the road.

"By the way, Quimby," remarked Mr. Magee, "is there a girl in your town who has blue eyes, light hair and the general air of a queen out shopping?"

"Light hair?" repeated Quimby. "There's Sally Perry. She teaches in the Methodist Sunday school."

"No," said Mr. Magee. "My description was poor, I'm afraid. This one I refer to, when she weeps, gives the general effect of mist on the sea at dawn. The Methodists do not monopolize her."

"I read books, and I read newspapers," said Mr. Quimby, "but a lot of your talk I don't understand."

"The critics," replied Billy Magee, "could explain. My stuff is only for low brass. Lead on, Mr. Quimby." Baldpate inn did not stand atop on the misty mountain top. Instead it clung with grim determination to the side of Baldpate, about halfway up, much as a city man clings to the running board of an open street car. This was the comparison Mr. Magee made, and even as he made it he knew that atmospheric conditions rendered it questionable. For an open street car suggests summer and the ball park; Baldpate inn, as it shouldered darkly into Mr. Magee's ken, suggested winter at its most wintry. (To be continued.)

AXE USED

In Family Fight, it is Alleged, and Father-in-Law is Arrested.

With his forehead plastered with bandages, Lee Williams, a coal miner employed at the Corona mine at Northview, walked into Justice William E. Starcher's court Monday morning and swore out a warrant against his father-in-law, Thomas Greaver, a coal miner employed at the same mine, charging him with hitting him in the head with an axe Saturday night when the two clashed in a quarrel. Williams received a long and painful, but not serious gash on the forehead, which required eight or ten stitches to close. A constable arrested Greaver Monday afternoon at Northview and took him before the justice. The latter arranged to hear the case within a day or two.

IN CLARKSBURG

The Evidence is Supplied by Local Testimony.

If the reader wants stronger proof than the following statement and experience of a resident of Clarksburg, what can it be? A. J. Smallwood, retired merchant, 212 Poplar street, Clarksburg, W. Va., says: "Oh and on for two years I suffered from a dull pain across my back. I couldn't sit still long without having pain. In the morning when I got up, I felt lame and sore. In sleeping or lifting, I had to be very careful. If I didn't want to suffer from aching twinges, I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised in the local papers and thinking they might help me, I got a box at Wells & Haymaker's Drug Store. My back soon felt strong and better than it had for a long time. Recently I had an attack of soreness across my back. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and was relieved, immediately. It took only one box to cure me. I have publicly recommended Doan's Kidney Pills before and I am glad to confirm all I have ever said about them." For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents.
