IMPORTANT QUESTIONS SCHEDULED

For Discussion at International Congress on the Welfare of the Child.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 10.—"Are the fundamentals in education taught as thoroughly today as they were in the old-time school?"

"Are pupils developing the power of concentration today as fully as they did in the schools of our forefathers?"

"Are present-day schools preparing children for life as fully as did the schools of a quarter of a century ago?"

These three questions of the highest concern to every parent and teacher, not only in the United States but in the whole civilized world, are set for discussion and authoritative answer at the forthcoming third international congress on the welfare of the child, to be held under the auspices of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent Teacher Associations in Washington, April 22 to 27. Dr. O'Shea Leader.

The particular discussion, of which the three questions form the subject, is to be led by Dr. M. V. O'Shea, professor of psychology in the University of Wisconsin, who is chairman of the national department of education of the National Congress of Mothers. Dr. G. Stanley Hall, of Worcester, Mass., and Dr. Helen C. Putnam, of Providence, R. I., are among others expected to participate in the discussion, which has been arranged for Saturday evening, April 25. Dr. O'Shea is making careful preparation for this feature of the congress program, it is stated at the Washington headquarters, and is selecting as participants those whose opinions will have the weight of authority based upon wide study, observation, and experience. The discussion is thus assured of being one of the most valuable contributions of present times toward a solution of the problems involved.

New Problems. Following this symposium on present-day educational methods and tendencies, Dr. O'Shea is also planning for another, entitled "New times bring new problems in child training." This discussion, like the first, will attempt to throw light upon the following important questions:

"Can the individual home train its children as effectively with regard to social, ethical and moral problems in contemporary urban life?"

"It is feasible and desirable for communities to act as a unit in determining the conduct of the young in present-day life?"

"Will a school as a social center solve the problem of the social, ethical, and moral training of the young in present-day American life?"

These three questions, vitally touching the relation of the parent to the training of the child, are also designed to focus attention of parents and teachers upon new problems that are product of modern civilization.

Shifting Responsibility. The tendency of parents to shift the responsibility for the entire training of children to the schools; community action, as expressed in juvenile courts and otherwise, in determining youthful conduct; and the value of the modern use of schools for social center purposes are to be fully considered in this supplementary discussion.

The whole program, extending for a week, is rich in contributions to child welfare, and is expected to be one of the most important international gatherings ever held in Washington or in the United States.

Mrs. Frederick Schoff, of Philadelphia, an official of the United States Bureau of Education, is president of the National Congress under the auspices of which the Third International Congress on the Welfare of the Child is to be held. Its officers, councilors, and managers comprise many of the leading educators and philanthropists in the United States.
