Government Medical Service.
 With the possibility of a foreign campaign before our army, what is the present condition of preparedness of the army medical service, especially as compared with its condition at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war in 1898? asks the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The contrast gives cause for gratification. In the last fifteen years the army has been practically reorganized. The development of the general staff and the training of experts for various duties have affected the medical department as well as the other branches of service. The enormous increase in scientific knowledge of disease and its prevention has been utilized by the medical officers. Our army medical corps is today a body of trained military sanitarians unsurpassed in any country. In experience, organization, equipment and training, there is no comparison between the present situation and that in 1898.

Experience has been gained in the campaigns in Cuba and the Philippines, in the military expeditions in China and Cuba, and in the maneuver camps in 1911 and 1913, so that the army today possesses a corps of specialists trained in camp sanitation. For over a year military camps have been maintained on the Texas border, containing from ten to twelve thousand men in a well-nigh perfect state of health.

The material equipment of the department is comparably better than it was fifteen years ago. The present system of field organization was almost unknown in 1898. The organization of mobile sanitary units, namely, the ambulance company and the field hospital, will prove a great advantage. While only four field hospitals are actually in existence, on account of congressional parsimony, the medical department has on hand ample supplies for a complete system of field hospitals for 300,000 men. These supplies are now in storage, packed for shipment and ready to be put on trains or ship-board at a moment's notice.

By way of contrast, at the breaking out of the Spanish-American war, the war department telegraphed the governors of the various states that it would be necessary for each state to send with its troops sufficient medical supplies to last for six weeks, as the government was unable to furnish them.

In a word, the medical department of the army—and the same may be said of the navy—has shared largely in the general progress which has been made in the last fifteen years. The present medical and hospital corps are as effectively organized, trained and equipped to fight disease as is the rest of the army to fight the enemy. Complete prevention of disease among large bodies of men under the unavoidable conditions of military life in actual warfare is impossible. The maintenance of sanitary camps and well equipped and efficient hospitals, as well as prevention of all avoidable diseases among our troops, can be reasonably expected.

WHITE HOUSE

with a spray of orange blossoms. Below the waist line it falls as a border to the tulle tunic. A novel feature of the lovely costume will be the bridal wreath of orange blossoms in cap effect from which the long tulle veil will be draped.

Sole Ornament.
 Practically the sole ornament to be worn by the bride will be a necklace of diamonds, the gift of the bridegroom.

Miss Wilson will carry a wonderful shower bouquet of lilies of the valley, white orchids and fern fronds.

More than a century of romantic White House history will form a fitting halo for the bridal couple in the ceremony of today. According to accepted authorities, Miss Eleanor Wilson will be the fourteenth bride to plight her troth within the historic walls of the famous mansion. In the identical room where she today will take the husband of her choice, "for better, for worse," beautiful Francis Folsom became the wife, twenty-eight years ago, of the then president of the United States, Grover Cleveland; and only a few months ago, the sister of the bride of today, Miss Jessie Wilson, was united in marriage, in the magnificent East room of the White House, to Francis B. Sayre.

The White House is hallowed in the memory of one other May bride, beloved Nellie Grant, who forty years ago was married in the East room to an English gentleman, Algernon C. F. Sartoris. Today's wedding will be unique in respect of the principals, as Miss Wilson will be the first daughter of a president of the United States to be joined in marriage to a member of the cabinet.

THE DAILY NOVELETTE

UPRIGHT ULRICH.

A maiden once lived in Manhattan; Who wasted ten years over Latin; She's poor as a mouse, Now cries through the house, "I might now be wearin' fine satin."

"Won't you sit down?" she said politely.
 "Oh, no," he returned easily. "Thanks just the same, but I think I'll stand awhile. I like to stand occasionally, you know."
 "Oh, do sit down," she urged cordially. "Take the Morris chair—we don't expect Mr. Morris in for awhile."
 "No, really, really, no," he refused pleasantly. "I think I'll stand up just for a change, you know."
 But she insisted.
 "Take the rocker—that's a nice comfortable chair."
 "I know," he admitted, "all your chairs are nice; in fact, I always thought so, but really, I think I'll stand."
 "Then try the little gilt chair," she wheedled. "I don't believe you've ever tried the little gilt one. (She never kept on just to show off her chairs, but because she was really hospitable.)
 "No, I've quite decided," he said, quite sternly, so that she knew better than to urge him further, for he had a will of his own. And he spent the rest of the evening conversing pleasantly and all that, but standing up.
 That afternoon he had taken his first riding lesson.

KNIGHTS

the coach from Elkins, which will be attached to the regular train No. 3 to Clarksburg.

Three Coaches for Clarksburg.
 In addition to the foregoing, one special parlor car will be operated on train No. 62, May 29. Morgan town to Clarksburg; two first class, vestibuled coaches will be attached to train No. 62 from Fairmont to Clarksburg and for the Clarksburg knights three first class, vestibuled coaches will be provided, which together with the equipment of the special train from Grafton will be operated as a special train from Clarksburg to Parkersburg. Stops will be made by the special at Salem and at Pennsboro to take on passengers. About thirty knights and a number of their ladies will take the special train at Salem and another special coach will be provided for them there. The special train is to arrive at Parkersburg not later than 12 o'clock noon. This time has been set because the opening session of the convalesce will begin at 2 o'clock and the knights and their ladies will want sufficient time for dinner and to don uniforms.

It is expected that there will be about 350 persons aboard the special train.

Big Attendance Expected.
 Extensive arrangements are being made for the convalesce and an unusually large attendance is anticipated. Clarksburg Commandery No. 13 expects to have the largest attendance of any visiting commandery and it hopes to carry off the honor in that respect as it did two years ago at the annual convalesce in Wheeling, when it captured the first prize—a beautiful silk flag—for having the largest number of uniformed members in the street parade. At Fairmont last year it had the largest attendance of any visiting commandery.

Shriners to Meet, Also.
 The convalesce will last throughout Wednesday and Thursday, May 20 and 21. Thursday night Nemesis temple of the Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, which is another branch of the Masonic order, will hold a business and ceremonial session. I. Wade Coffman, of Clarksburg, is the Illustrate Potentate of the temple, or in other words, its chief officer, and when he presides on that occasion he will have just returned from the Imperial convention of the body at Charleston, S. C. and will have some interesting information to impart to the members along with a report of the convention proceedings. A large

THURSDAY, MAY 7, 1914.

An Evening Echo.
 We should ever have it fixed in our memories that, by the character of those whom we choose for our friends, our own is likely to be formed, and will certainly be judged by the world. We ought, therefore, to be slow and cautious in contracting intimacy, but when a virtuous friendship is once established, we must ever consider it a sacred engagement.—BLAIR.

A system of better roads is of more importance and will benefit the state more than anything else that can be given the state. Governor Ahtfield in proclaiming May 28 and 29 as legal holidays for the purpose of working the roads of the state has laid the foundation for this great gift and it will require the patriotism and energy of the loyal citizenship of West Virginia to back up the governor to get these results.

Don't Kill the Birds.
 How many persons remember the beautiful verses in one of the old-time school readers on "Don't Kill the Birds"? It taught a lesson well worth while, but today ruthless disregard for the sentiment those verses contained is being shown. The matter of slaughtering native birds is serious. As a Connellsville exchange says in recent years the preservation and propagation of native song birds have come to be regarded as highly essential. Special officers have been appointed to look after their safety and to bring to justice those who ruthlessly destroy them. Societies have been formed whose only object have been to prevent the slaying of the feathered songsters and to add to their numbers instead of depleting their ranks.

It might not, therefore, be untimely, to call to the attention of the properly constituted officials the slaughtering of robins, blackbirds, cat-birds, in fact all of the old favorites right on the very edge of the city limits. The shrubbery along Isabella Road teams with the very best examples of native bird life, but it will not seem long unless something is done to stop certain depredations in that vicinity. The killing of wild birds near Connellsville is not being done by foreigners, but by thoughtless American boys, of between 12 and 17 years in possession of their first guns. Residents of the vicinity have complained and now threaten the penalty of the law if it is not stopped. Such threats should not be necessary in the case of American boys. Native pride and a knowledge of just what these birds mean to the community should be all that is necessary to influence their actions.

The Town Garden.
 What the Charleston Mail says about the town garden in its city applies very well here. It is gratifying to know that Clarksburg has a number of gardens and it ought to have more. It would have, if indifference and a degree of laziness, perhaps, were cast aside. Only those who have town gardens really appreciate their great value. The Mail very well tells as follows of some of the value:

The popularity of the town garden, or rather the city garden, is a thing of recent years—at least that is the case with Charleston, with few rare exceptions. The practice has been growing, and as the practice has grown so has its popularity grown. It is healthful, even if at times somewhat painful. The results vary with the soil, the cultivation and the experience, the perseverance and the industry of the gardener. Something likewise is to be credited to the season.

There is no vegetable so fine as that which is the product of one's own toil and care. Leaving out of question the fact that the vegetable is fresh, brought in with the dripping morning dew upon it, there is the pride in one's work of which this particular vegetable is a specimen. Beans, cucumbers, tomatoes that ripen on the vine, peas fresh from the vine, lettuce that is crisp with its very freshness, radishes that melt like strawberries—these are not found at the shops; they come out of the backyard gardens.

Then there is the question of cost. Gardens are the most inveterate enemies of the high cost of living in the summer time. Any kind of a backyard will do, although some kinds are better than others. And now is the time. The possessor of a backyard garden that is carefully looked
