MONDAY, JANUARY 17, 1916.

An Evening Echo.
 Search others for their virtues, and thyself for thy vices.—FULLER.

The income tax for the last fiscal year was paid by 357,515 individuals, or not quite one for each 300 of population, which indicates that prosperity has quite a little work ahead of it before all of us will be rolling in wealth.

"What is spared in money is spilled in blood." This utterance by David Lloyd George in the House of Commons is a complete statement of the meaning of preparedness for national defense. England was not prepared when war came and has to prepare while fighting for its existence.

Andy Price's Epitome.
 The following is taken from the Pocahontas Times of recent date, edited by Andy Price, a prominent Democrat:

We can hardly imagine Abe Lilly in the governor's chair. Judge Robinson is a lean, lank, austere man of the presiding elder type, while Abe is a roly-poly, oily looking gent. He is only put on flesh since we last saw him and bids fair to be a fat man. In fact, he is almost stoteygous. It is a lean man for a long race, and the fat man knoweth not what the lean man thinketh, are a couple of proverbs that occur to us in this somewhat personal allusion. We are inclined to think that the contest in the primary will be unequal and that Robinson will sweep this state.

We have not the slightest idea who will be the Democratic nominee but he will be a good man, insured to misfortune and acquainted with grief.

That Embargo.
 As was inevitable, the question of an embargo on munitions of war came to the surface in the Senate soon after Congress reconvened. Senator Works, a consistent, pacifist, was led in debate reluctantly to admit that an embargo on actual munitions would be futile and ineffective unless it would also include all military supplies, such as food for the armies, blankets, cloth for uniforms, steel rails, etc., and finally to admit that an effective embargo would mean the suspension of practically all the foreign trade of the United States.

Senator Lodge contended that an embargo would be unneutral because, at the beginning of the war, the United States was selling to all the belligerents with equal freedom, that those conditions which now make it impossible for the Teutonic allies to effect delivery of goods bought in this country were purely the effect of the war, of England's having gained control of the sea, and that for this country to attempt by an embargo to alter this effect of the war would amount to unneutral participation in the war.

Senator Reed, Democrat, emphatically protested against such an embargo because of the financial depression and suffering which would result in this country.

After the Senate went into executive session the discussion was continued, and one senator, a Democrat, said, "I wish to see no one suffer, and especially no babies starve. But if babies must starve as a result of the war, I would much rather it should be German babies than American babies who, with an embargo, would starve because their fathers could not sell their labor or the products of their farms. It is all sad, deplorable, but let us not, in our worship of peace, forget the living wants of our own people, who are saved from penury and starvation only by the demand for all the supplies which are going to support the European armies."

The Deadly Sandwich.
 Without a word of comment the Pittsburg Gazette Times has produced one of the strongest articles that has come to the attention of the Telegram in criticism of the attitude of the Wilson administration on the Mexican situation by sandwiching the various statements emanating from the diplomatic circle at Washington between the cold facts concerning the Mexican outrages as published in the newspapers from day to day. When contrasted, these statements make their own strongest argument for a change of our policy toward Mexico and her bandits and furnish the most castigating indictment against the Wilson policy of "watchful waiting" yet returned. Read and reflect. The diplomatic sandwich is passed on to you without further seasoning which is very palatable without opinions from this quarter, as it appeared in the Gazette Times, as follows:

"It was made plain at the White House that the president has not deviated in the least from his policy as regards Mexico."

El Paso—Carrying its death etc., the train with the seventeen Americans of the San Ysabel massacre arrived here.

"President Wilson stands squarely behind Secretary Lansing in his statement that Americans who enter Mexico in the face of warning from this government did so at their own risk."

El Paso—Within a few moments the executioners had gone completely down the line. The Americans lay on the ground, some writhing and gasping in the sand and cinders.

"Prospects are that Senator Sherman's resolution will not be acted on in view of the suggestion of Senator Stone that the president be left to handle the situation for the present."

El Paso—Colonel Lopez ordered the "trio de gracia" (mercy shot) given to those Americans who were still alive, and the soldiers placed the ends of their rifles at the victims' heads, putting the wounded out of their misery.

"There were no signs, however, that the American government would take any action in the case beyond that already taken."

El Paso—Soft-nosed bullets (made in America?) had been used, making ragged holes in the heads of the Americans. The skulls of three men had been shot away.

"The American demand was conveyed to Carranza in a note sent him through Consul Silliman."

El Paso—Wallace had been shot. Another body was on top of Wallace's. Each body had from two to five holes in it.

"The administration and state department officials seemed bewildered."

El Paso—Fourteen bodies were piled together in a draw. All were completely stripped of clothing and shoes. It was horrible. The blood smeared the white skins.

"Have not the European nations taken as long as they wanted and spilled as much blood as they pleased in settling their affairs, and shall we deny that to Mexico, because she is weak?" No, I say!"

Woodrow Wilson, Indianapolis, January 8, 1915.

Watchful Waiting Still.
 The brutal murder of Americans and others in Mexico can occasion no surprise to those familiar with conditions there and who have not been misled by the specious sophistries expounded from the White House. From the beginning of his administration President Wilson has been warned by everyone whose advice was worthy of respect that the Mexican "revolutionists" were merely bandits, wholly unworthy of the slightest encouragement from the United States. At least two members of Mr. Wilson's own cabinet, Messrs. Garrison and Lane, have repeatedly implored him to stop the supply of arms to the bandits, and all those best informed on the situation warned him that if he persisted in his determination to oust Huerta chaos and anarchy and unspeakable outrages would follow. Mr. Wilson turned a deaf ear to those warnings, caused the insurgents to be supplied with the very guns which are now being used to murder American citizens, employed the army and navy to drive Huerta out, publicly declared that the Mexicans must be free to take as many lives as they wished, issued repeated warnings to insurgent leaders that they would be held "personally responsible" for the killing of Americans, and never even attempted to make good his words. He treated with Villi, and his reaction as a murderer, and finally, when public criticism of President Wilson became too severe in this country, he recognized as president Carranza, who had never missed an opportunity to flaunt and insult the United States and who possessed no single qualification as a ruler.

As a result of Mr. Wilson's policy, the Mexican bandits have naturally come firmly to believe that the sport least likely to be attended with harm to themselves is the killing of Americans. The unintelligent Mexican regards the United States with hatred and contempt, and the intelligent Mexican holds this country, and rightly so, responsible for a large share of the terrible suffering to which the Mexican people have been subjected. They realize that it was President Wilson's "butting in" which alone has placed their country at the mercy of the cutthroats and outlaws which now terrorize it.

According to a reputable newspaper correspondent, Mark S. Watson, sent to Mexico by the New York Sun and the Chicago Tribune, and now there, the Wilson administration has not hesitated to give out statements regarding Mexican conditions which it knew to be false, in order to deceive the American people into believing that things are less bad than they are. Mr. Watson reports that there are 50,000 cases of typhus in Mexico City alone, which at the present death rate will mean at least 12,000 deaths, and the chief responsibility for this condition rests on Carranza, who would not let the American Red Cross deal with the situation at the start, and on President Wilson, who forced the Carranza regime on the Mexican people.

Ever since Mr. Wilson recognized Carranza, Americans have been killed and outraged almost daily, generally by the Villistas, sometimes by the Carranzistas, but in all instances without Carranza—who hates and despises Americans as much as Villi—raising a hand to prevent it.

Only when the bandits murder Americans in blocks of fifteen or twenty, and the newspapers widely herald the fact, does President Wilson pause in his scheming to make personal political capital out of the European situation long enough to take heed of the wanton outrages perpetrated on American citizens just across the border.

HUNTINGTON: Believing that thousands of dollars a year could be saved to housewives and that the work of the department would be greatly aided, J. H. CHARLESTON: Unless Governor Hatfield intercedes, Eldridge Davis, colored, convicted in McDowell county for the murder of Bertha Gamble, December 1, 1915, will be hanged at the penitentiary next Friday. Davis has written the governor a letter in which he describes himself as a person of unusual physical strength, a good worker and as being willing to spend the remainder of his life at hard work as a convict. He says in the letter that it is not right to hang a man who could be used with profit by the state.

THERE IS A VAST ARMY
 of men and women who really never know what it is to enjoy sound, vibrant health—who would be surprised to suddenly gain that exhilarating vitality that robust health brings.

Literally thousands without any particular sickness live in "general debility", as the doctors call it—have headaches, are tired and indifferent. To all such people we say with unmistakable earnestness—"Take Scott's Emulsion for meals for one month and allow its rare oil-food to enrich and enliven your blood, quicken your circulation, stimulate nutrition, and aid nature to develop that real red-blooded life that means activity, enjoyment, success."

Scott's Emulsion is not a drug, but a pleasant food- tonic—free from alcohol. One bottle may help you.

THE RETURN
 A little trim. Ah, me! Ah, my!
 It changes one completely,
 A barber can do mighty things
 And do them very neatly.

(Translated from the Russian.)
 "Twas a cold day along the Russian vodka.
 The white snow fell deep on the uneven moujiks, and the samovars chattered as they hurried along the deserted pazaes.
 The tall stranger burst in upon fair Elknova Wienerovna as she was trying bomburst for the children's supper.

 "Elknaar!" she cried, and rushed into his arms.
 "My wife! Thou knewest me at once, then? After all these years?"
 "I would have known thee anywhere!" she replied proudly. "After all, it has only been six years since last I saw your dear face."
 "Six years!" mused the tall one.
 "Just think, for six years hast thou had no sight of my face. For six years I have not had my whiskers cut. And yet thou knewest me!"
 And once more the fair Elknova Wienerovna kissed the long-lost face of her husband who had just returned from the barber's.

DRASTIC CUT IN PRICES IS MADE
 By the People's Store at Its Great Semi-Annual Clearance Sale.

It is further stated that the privileges of the justly popular charge account system of this store will be extended the same as usual even though prices have been ruthlessly cut.

One of the surest barometers of the financial conditions of the times are the activities of the retail clothing stores.

From reports of local stores it would seem that this city has shared to an unusual extent in the great wave of prosperity that has swept over the country. With hardly an exception all records of previous seasons have been shattered and it must be remembered that the present season is still young.

Mr. Ivan Julius, manager of the People's store at 408 West Pike street, states that never in his experience has he seen such heavy buying. Since the opening of the season his store has been literally overwhelmed and, as he puts it, it has taxed the capacity of himself and his sales force to the limit to take care of customers.

The People's store is one of the old reliable stores handling a line of first class clothing for men, women and children at moderate prices. It enjoys a unique position among the retail clothing stores of this city for it is claimed that this store is a part of the largest retail clothing organization in this country. The proprietors of the store operate a chain now numbering nearly one hundred. They make the statement that the manufacturing of their cloth is done in their own New York factories and it is claimed that selling thus direct to the wearer, all intermediate profits are eliminated and it is possible to sell a better grade of clothing at less than the usual retail prices.

It is announced that the enormous business of the People's store has resulted in big assortments of odd sizes, broken lots and a general accumulation of broken lines usual with a heavy volume of business. It is claimed that the merchandise is of the highest grade, perfect in every respect, but to clear stock quickly a drastic cut in prices has been made.

The proprietors of the People's store state that this great clearance sale, their fiftieth annual event, establishes a record for big values. They claim that never before were such wonderful bargains offered in fine, seasonable clothing. Low prices, they point out, are no indication of quality, for the best fashionable winter clothing is now being sold regardless of profit.

OH, LOOK! HERE'S A BASEBALL HOLD-OUT

Harold Janvrin.

Although the settling of the dove of peace in the baseball world flooded the market with players, Harold Janvrin, the Boston Red Sox player, has the distinction of being the first hold-out of the year. He wants more money.

Recent excavations of an ancient Roman villa, near Liege, disclosed fragments of coal, leading to the belief that the fuel was mined in Belgium as far back as the beginning of the Christian era.

PORTER SAVES
 Interurban Station Sunday Morning by Being on Hand to Call Fire Department.

Because "Daddy" Briton, colored, night porter at the interurban station of the Monongahela Valley Traction Company, decided the weather unfit for him to go home after the last car operated Saturday night, and slept in his store room in the terminal, that structure is possibly standing today.

At 3:30 o'clock Sunday morning Britton awoke to find the roof of his room ablaze. Crossed wires had set fire to the structure. He ran to a car barn for a bucket of water and when he returned the entire room was burning. The fire department, the headquarters of which are near, was called and saved the building.

At 3 o'clock Sunday morning barn men had been in the station, but had not discovered the fire. Had not Britton awakened, the entire building which is of frame, would have soon been in flames. The old negro lost his clothes in his efforts to save the property.

Superintendent Flaherty has plans for a new terminal building agreed upon by the general officials at Fairmont, but does not want to build it until later in the year.

This is only one paragraph from Mr. Price's sparkling letter, which will be printed in full in next Sunday's Telegram, along with dozens of other letters from leading West Virginians, expressing their views on woman suffrage, which is to be voted on in this state in November.
