The Store That Pays No Rent

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—The last gasp of cubist art and futurism as it once raged in Manhattan has been celebrated by a pagan revel at Leslie Hall. Women clas as Cleopatra strolled about the hall smoking cigarets, although tobacco was not invented at the time Cleopatra did her cleaning.

And of the girl who replies: "Yes, isn't it wonderful?" Just as if the predominance of the primary colors was something well worth fighting and dying for. Then there was the man who cannot dance and therefore sits with a fat anarchist girl, telling her he refuses to dance because he is a rebel. A real Chinaman was there with his face painted white. Futurism, you know, negates the old color scheme.

George C. Bolt is leaving the Waldorf-Astoria for the sunshine of California. He is leaving the affairs of his hotel in charge of Oscar, who began as a waiter and rose to the high position of director. It is not believed that Mr. Bolt will return to New York only on visits and business trips. Before he left he personally arranged a surprise banquet to Copeland Townsend, long his associate at another hotel in New York. About the banquet board were the top-notchers of hotel life. They have genuine cause for rejoicing for the hotel business has been the best in twenty years during the last year.

A man from up-state sat down in a Broadway theater next to "Diamond Jim," the well known Brady, the other evening. Between acts he turned to the metropolitan first nighter and said:

"Where do all them troopers come from?" "I don't think I understand. I mean them there actors on the stage. Was they brought on especially for this here drama or do they live here?" "I believe most of them live here in town," said Brady.

The costume and color effects of Leon Bakst, designer for the Ballet Russe, have given New Yorkers a genuine artistic wallop. People who do not understand the high brow dances go just to see the scenery but of course they do not admit that.

The Ballet girls are having their first experiences with the stage door Johnnies. They flock to the door of the Century in droves to spend some of dad's hard earned money on lizzie water for the beauties.

As Serge de Diaghileff and his monocle and Louis H. Chalfi were leaving the theater the other night for a bite, one of the dancers approached them. In Russian she said:

"I have just had to slap an insulting man?" "What d'd he do?" "He got fresh and I jerked a carnation out of his buttonhole and struck him. I think he has fainted in the alley."
