WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 9, 1916.

An Evening Echo. When over the fair fame of friend or foe The shadow of disgrace shall fall, instead Of words of blame, or proof of thus and so, Let something good be said. Forget not that no fellow being yet May fall so low but love may lift the head, Even the cheek of shame with tears is wet. If something good be said, —JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

Why Rejoice? The Democratic press is jubilant over the fact that the Aero Club of America, which a few months ago was berating President Wilson for not recognizing the need of aeroplanes in the army, is now praising him for finally yielding to reason.

The "Sissy" in Uniform. General Funston calls the complaining militiamen sissies and mollycoddlers. The Kansan who captured Aguinaldo thinks that a soldier should take all his hardships as a part of the day's work and without a murmur. The regulars do that, but they are gradually and systematically inured to a rough life, reminds the Philadelphia Ledger. Nor are their regiments followed about as are the guardsmen by home correspondents and photographers ready to record by written word and picture every detail of unusual service. The regular seems to be nobody's child. He is a detached and separate being, allied to no locality or state. He is national, and if he has a "kick coming" nobody hears about it.

It is different with the clerk and farm lad, pitchedforked from comfortable beds into warlike conditions in Texas. But give the volunteer a little time and he will also take his medicine stoically as did his ancestors at Bull Run and Gettysburg. He is of exactly the same stuff as the regular, but he lacks the training that makes a soldier. Every part of war or a war-war like that in Mexico is just the sort of hell which Sherman said it was, so that the country should not take too seriously the tales of hardships which pour back from the fairly peaceful camp along the Rio Grande.

Chasing Rainbows. How the Democrats are chasing rainbows is shown by statement recently made by Vance McCormick, the Democratic national chairman, who says that he has been assured that the great majority of the Maine Progressives will vote the Democratic ticket the coming fall.

Of course nothing more utterly nonsensical in a political way could have been uttered. There were a few Democrats in the Progressive party in that state—very few—and they may return to their previous affiliations, but particularly the whole of the Progressive voters was drawn from the Republicans, and they are Republicans now. These Progressives have returned or are returning to the Republican party. They are signing the publican petitions and a great many of them took part in the Republican primaries. Men who mingle with the voters in every town in Maine and hear the political talk know this to be true.

And Wilson Won't "Butt-In." So low has the United States of America fallen in the estimation of Mexicans that "Americans living in Chihuahua and other cities in northern Mexico are wearing small British flags to ward off insults to themselves and their nationality, according to a report brought from Mexico," says a dispatch from Columbus, N. M.

This is the result of the Woodrow Wilson policy of watchful waiting, of temporizing with bandits, of going in and drawing back, of changing his mind, of "cutting-in" where he has no business and refraining from vigorous action when conditions call for it. With over 100,000 soldiers in the field and a loyal nation at his back, Mr. Wilson has no other protection for Americans rightfully in Mexico than to urge them to come away. And so they have to place themselves under the protection of a foreign flag. The Mexicans will spit on the American flag. They do not dare to insult the emblem of the British.

Was humiliation ever greater for citizens of the United States? Will nothing stir this self-satisfied president of humanity to comprehension of his duties as president of the United States?

As to Street Names. While the city council is worrying itself about changing the names of streets, it would do well to reconsider one or two of the Virginia thoroughfares in the community and those prevent much inconvenience. There is a Virginia street in Colonial Heights, a Virginia avenue in Carle Heights, a Virginia street in Glen Elk, a Virginia street at Adamston and perhaps two or three other Virginia streets in some of the other suburbs. Those having similar names within the corporate limits should by all means be changed. Virginia street in Colonial Heights ought by rights to be called Sixth street, if those numbers are logically to be carried out. There is some question as to the wisdom of having north and south streets of the same name in Glen Elk and in the main part of the city. Why not leave the numbers for telephone directories and house lots and give the numbered streets pretty names?

While the council is about it, the prosaic commencement of Main and Pike should suggest itself to that body's attention. Every little country town in the land has a Main and a Pike street, wherefore why should not Clarksburg adopt something really distinctive as well as euphonic? Also, what excuse has Mechanic street for its name?

The Paris Pact. Overshadowing all the problems which will grow out of the European war, in its importance to the people of the United States, is the problem to be found in the Paris economic pact entered into by the allied powers in June last. This pact proposes (1) to devise joint means to secure to countries suffering from acts of destruction and spoliation of their raw materials, plants, etc., the restoration of the same, or to assist them to reequip themselves in these respects; (2) conservation for, and interchange between, the allied countries of their natural resources; (3) denial to the Central powers for a period to be fixed, of "most favored nation" treatment; (4) protection against "dumping" by the Central powers. The foregoing are contained in the plans adopted for what is known as the reconstruction period. Under the heading of "Permanent Measures of Mutual Assistance" the Allies will take steps (1) to render themselves self-sufficient in regard to raw materials and manufactured articles essential to the normal development of their economic activities, which may include subsidies, or government direction and control, customs duties or prohibitions, or to combinations of these methods; (2) to facilitate and improve the interchange of their products; (3) to assimilate laws governing patents, trademarks, etc., and for the adoption of an identical procedure in regard to same. Measures quite similar in character to those contained in the Paris pact have been agreed upon by the Central powers.

While it is an economic fallacy to suppose that any measures taken to enforce absolute non-intercourse between nations formerly at war can be enduring in their character, certain it is that for some years following the present struggle, which had its inception in trade jealousies, commercial intercourse between the Allies and the Central powers will be fearfully curtailed. What, then, must be the effect of these pacts on the industries of the United States? With the two groups of nations now at war adopting a post-bellum policy of commercial non-intercourse, there can be but one result, under a Democratic near-free-trade law: They will consider the United States their best customer, and will proceed to unload on our market. In their efforts to drive each other out of this market the two groups will start in a merciless and unrelenting way, the very ones of American manufacturers. This may continue until our industries are paralyzed, our laborers are subjects of charity, and the poverty of the country has reduced us to a point where we are no longer good customers of the competing groups, and probably about that time these pacts will become nullities.

In a recent address, Frank A. Vanderlip declared: "We must buy abroad an increasing volume of things that we can never economically produce. We must pay for them in goods and it should be our ambition to pay for them in finished goods, which represent the higher achievements of labor rather than in raw materials." Mr. Vanderlip sees the evolution of the United States from an agricultural to a manufacturing nation. The greatest need of Europe will be raw materials. The countries most needing these raw materials are our keenest competitors—Germany and Austria. If Germany buys our coal, iron, copper, cotton, etc., and, under a Democratic tariff law, is permitted to run our manufacturers out of business, the dream of Mr. Vanderlip will never be realized. We will become hewers of wood and drawers of water. The re-equipment of countries which have suffered from spoliation, means that Belgium, our great competitor in the glass industry, is to be made industrially whole, and one of our greatest enterprises will meet competition which will make the competition of past years mere child's play.

The Democrats enacted a tariff law which opened this market wide to the nations of the world. The Democrats set the seal of approval on that law in their St. Louis platform. In face of the fact that commercial conditions the world over are undergoing a revolution, the Democratic party refuses to budge from its policy of a tariff for revenue only. If we are to be commercially prepared, after the European war, we must have a Republican administration.

BEATING THE GAME.

Before marriage a woman is pensive, afterwards expensive.—Prof. Simp.

"How can I serve you, my dear Presbyterian with an unhappy wife?" said the great detective blandly. "Oh, don't start, sir. It's very simple. Simply very. At one fell swoop, I deduced you are a Presbyterian and that you have an unhappy wife, because I observe that the left shoulder of your coat has been pressed 'b'ers. H'm." "Marvelous!" She was crying there all morning because I have to pay an income tax," explained the worried looking visitor. "But the object of my call is this. I am a conscientious man, terribly. If there is anything amiss in the affairs of any man on my office force, I hold myself personally bound to investigate. For a good many days now, I have noticed that after disappearing mysteriously during the lunch hour, my shipping clerk, Wagoner Flippa by name, returns with blood on his fingers. I simply cannot tolerate having a confirmed murderer in my office, so I came to you. I have no fault to find with Flippa otherwise. He is very economical and all that." "A pretty case, very!" said the great detective, licking his chops. "Ha, H'm. Lunch hour. Where is your place of business, please?" "Corner of Ditts and Baumheim." "Solved!" smiled the great detective, with a wink. "Gobglass's saloon is directly across from you—never mind how I know—Gobglass serves pickled beets for free lunch every day—never mind how I know—with no forks to spear them with. Your economical shipping clerk—oh, you grasp my point? Not at all, not at all. Ten dollars, please."

DANISH WEST INDIES SOURCE OF BAY RUM

Own the American People Will Feel More at Home with the Islands Their Own.

(SPECIAL TO THE TELEGRAM.) WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—After fifty years of negotiation, the United States is on the threshold of achieving the ownership of the source of all genuine bay rum. It is true that we are not buying the Danish West Indies primarily because they are the group made famous by the refreshing toilet preparation, nevertheless the American people will feel more "at home" in calling the islands "ours" when they recall that it was not for St. Thomas, St. John and St. Croix freshly shaved faces would be unsoothed and throbbing heads would be uncooled by the universally popular product of distilled bay leaves. The geography and etymology of bay rum are defined in the following bulletin issued by the National Geographic Society: "If the average user of bay rum stops to consider the name and origin of this fragrant lotion he probably thinks it quite appropriate that the perfume should be made from the fruit of the 'flourishing green bay tree' and of those leaves with which the heroes and poets of antiquity were 'crowned' when the people delighted to do them honor. The thought is appropriate but the facts are refractory, for it isn't that kind of a bay tree. The bay tree of glory is the laurus nobilis, while the bay of rum has the caustic name of myrica acris.

Peculiar Species. "The peculiar species of aromatic bay which supplies the distinctive ingredient of bay rum is closely allied in appearance to several other varieties of bay growing on St. John and St. Croix, and great care is necessary to avoid confusion in gathering the leaves and berries. For a very small number of leaves of the wrong kind will materially affect the quality of the finished product. The leaves of the myrica acris are from three to five inches in length. The round berries are about seven to eight seeds. The bay rum which is made from a combination of green leaves and berries is of a better quality than that distilled from dried leaves or from the leaves without berries. The berries are very difficult to gather, however, and they cost from fifteen to twenty times as much as the leaves.

Much Made Here. "For a number of years much of the bay rum of American commerce has been manufactured in this country, the ingredients usually being about one-half the oak alcohol, one-sixteenth Jamaica rum, forty drops of oil of bay to the pint, twenty drops of oil of orange, a few drops of oil of mace, and the remainder distilled water, all of which is allowed to stand for several weeks and is then filtered through magnesia.

"The myrica acris is only a distant relative in the family of trees to the ornamental tubed bays which before the war were shipped to this country by the tens of thousands from Holland and Belgium, where their culture was an important industry. The trees are grown from tiny cuttings carefully rooted under bell glass or in glass cases, then set out in beds where during the first season they grow from three to five feet. They are not ready for market, however, for five or six years, during which time they are trimmed and nurtured until they are hardy and shapely.

BARTUS CHILD DEAD. Victor Bartus, aged five months, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bartus, of house No. 8, Columbia mines, died at 11:30 o'clock Tuesday night following a few hours' illness of cholera infantum. The funeral services will be held at 9:30 o'clock Thursday morning at the church of the Holy Rosary. The burial will be in the Holy Cross cemetery.

FAIRMONT: Fairmont people have started a campaign for better meat, and the dealers who sell better cuts to their customers will be prosecuted. The first man caught in the cleanup was H. S. Stern, who sold spoiled meat to George N. Watson. Watson had the meat examined by two doctors, who said it was unfit to eat. He took it back to the butcher, who insisted it was good. Tonight Mayor Bowen fined Stern $10 and costs for selling spoiled meats.

WHEELING: The second case of infantile paralysis has developed here. The 4-year-old child of Walter Cooley, and brother of the first victim, who died Sunday, is in a critical condition. The health department is taking precautions to prevent a spread of the plague.

CHARLESTON: Representatives of the National and West Virginia Associations Opposed to Woman Suffrage has opened headquarters here to fight ratification of the proposed amendment to the state constitution extending the ballot to women.

In sprinkling streets each water taker must confine himself to the number of feet mentioned in his permit.
