THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1916.

An Evening Echo.

The fearless manner in which Republicans stand now, in the fullest sense, for the policy of tariff protection to American industries and American labor is the attitude of men who know that they are right and know that every one else should know it.

Why They Are Optimistic.

"From this day forth," says the Parkersburg News, "the Democratic party should abandon whatever hope it has had of gaining control of the state government."

Tells the Story.

My platform is the platform of the Republican party, and the simple code of truth and honor.—Judge Robinson.

Same in Every County.

It is remarkable how quickly the Republicans have been getting together in Lincoln county within the last ten days.—Lincoln Republican.

The Maine Explanations.

For information to who was hit by the Maine results, see the explanations column, says the Washington Times. The explanations come from Democratic authorities. The Republicans are not making them. We read, for instance, that the Maine election merely proves that the Democratic managers made a tactical error in claiming too much; more than they could possibly hope to gain in a rock-ribbed Republican state.

There is something in the explanation. Maine, in this regard, is completely typical of the United States. Maine is normally Republican, and is once more normal. The United States is normally Republican, and will be Republican after it gets as good a chance as Maine has had to prove its real allegiance.

Should Own Up.

The Exponent, in a miserable attempt to apologize for the work of some designing Democrat who used its news service to send broadcast a news story about an imagined illness of United States Senator Borah, tries to make it appear that an editor of the Telegram sent out the lying dispatch.

"We need a change," declares Representative Mondell, apropos of the issues of this campaign. "Never has the country needed a change of administration more than it needs it now. The Democratic party and the Democratic administration have failed utterly to maintain the prestige and honor of the country abroad. They have failed even more conspicuously, if that were possible, to make any provision for the industrial conditions that are certain to confront the nation at the close of the European war."

No Purchase of Lilly.

"Then came the purchase of Abe Lilly and the compromise measures making Robinson the candidate."—Fairmont Times (Dem.)

This is libelous, if anything, and Attorney General Lilly would be justified in making the Times prove that he was "purchased" or sent him for damages. There was no "purchase" of General Lilly, and the Times knows it, or should know it. Everybody else does.

General Lilly withdrew his contests, because after investigation he was convinced that they could not be supported. He was convinced, after thoroughly looking into the matter, that while Judge Robinson's lead over him was not a large one, considering the total vote, it was an honest and legitimate one, and could not be changed materially by any further prosecution of his contest.

Therefore, he did the only thing he could do, the only thing that was expected of him as a staunch Republican and as a game loser, he called off his dogs, and sent them with him in defeat for the nomination and came out in the strongest kind of a declaration, in favor of the election of Judge Robinson to the governorship, and appealing to all who supported him in the primary to stand by the gubernatorial nominee and every candidate on the Republican ticket, national, state, county and district.

The man who is really happy is the man who lives in the future—who anticipates. "Hope" is a current writer, "is a much more dominant factor in the joys of life than realization." How many a good time you have had anticipating the good time that didn't materialize!

The man or woman who never takes thought of the future, of course, cannot look forward to the future with any hope of anticipation. The wise man says, "Look out of tomorrow and today will look out for itself." The fool says, "Have a good time today and let tomorrow worry about itself!"

The world is full of Esaus—men, women and children who sell out cheap—a year's wretchedness for an hour's gratification; a day's pay for a few moments' thrill; a week's wage for a day's dissipation. There is a law of compensation at work in this old world and you will find out that you pay for every foolish thing you do.

The foolish one believes in now; he seizes tomorrow. "We live but once," says he, "therefore let us live merrily." That is just the reason why he ought to live sensibly—we live but once, therefore let us live well!

the complete amalgamation of Republicans and Progressives in Maine. West Virginia and in every other state in the galaxy—these all helped to restore Republican confidence in the triumphant success of their party this year.

Senator Borah Strong for Suffrage.

Suffrage as a practical working issue was given a strong endorsement Monday evening by Senator William E. Borah of Idaho in his address at Morantown. His remarks were greeted with applause by the large audience.

"The presence of woman in politics, armed with the power to enforce her demands, has been substantially for the benefit of society," said Senator Borah. "After a trial of some twenty-three or twenty-four years Idaho believes in woman suffrage. It has made for cleaner politics and better legislation."

"As regards the women voting I wish to state that the women do vote, in exactly as good proportion as the men. However, woman's potential influence is very great and in a state that has equal suffrage no platform is ever framed on the supposition that the women will not vote."

"I hope that on November 7 the voters of West Virginia will be sufficiently far sighted to vote for the suffrage amendment and give the states the benefit of the women in politics. Voting has not caused the women to neglect their homes nor has it brought any of these dire results that the opponents of the cause would have you believe. Vote for the amendment on November 7."

Senator Borah has had every opportunity to see suffrage as a practical issue in the development and growth of a state and his strong and sincere endorsement of the cause should convince the voters of this state that it is to their best interests and to the best interests of all concerned that they cast a favorable vote for the amendment.

On November 7 West Virginia will have an opportunity to be the first eastern state to grant suffrage to its women. First in so many things, why not first in this? Ask the hundreds of women who are working hard to secure citizenship for themselves and for all the women of the state.

Nonsense about Maine. When Josephus Daniels says that "the Republicans ought to have carried Maine by at least 50,000," that this year's plurality was greatly "cut down," and that the result indicates "the triumphant election of Mr. Wilson in November," the Charleston Mail says we may easily conclude that this is simply a characteristic exhibition of stupidity on the part of Mr. Wilson's misfit secretary of the navy.

The Republican pluralities in the Maine gubernatorial elections held in September since 1902, have been as follows: 1906, 7,838; 1908, 7,653; 1910, 8,753 for the Democratic candidate; 1912, 3,225. In 1916, the Republican plurality is approximately 14,000. In comparison with other September elections in Maine for the last ten years, the election of 1916 was therefore an impressive sweep for the Republicans.

As to the November elections, the Republican pluralities in Maine for more than forty years have been almost invariably larger in the November than in the September elections. In 1908, for instance—a typical year, before the advent of Progressivism—the Republican plurality of 7,653 for governor in September, was increased to 9,584 for the presidential electors in November.

Unless all Maine history is upset next November—an unlikely thing in view of the September sweep—Mr. Hughes's plurality in the Pine Tree state should be anywhere from 30,000 to 50,000.

Today and Tomorrow. "Eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow ye die," says some foolish one, as quoted in the Good Book. "But," observes a wise man of the present, "you flatter yourself—tomorrow you will live, and that is worse than dying."

The child lives in the present. The boy wants things now. He has no patience. He does not know tomorrow or what tomorrow means. Time is no element in his scheme of things. He simply lives.

The man who is really happy is the man who lives in the future—who anticipates. "Hope" is a current writer, "is a much more dominant factor in the joys of life than realization." How many a good time you have had anticipating the good time that didn't materialize!

The man or woman who never takes thought of the future, of course, cannot look forward to the future with any hope of anticipation. The wise man says, "Look out of tomorrow and today will look out for itself." The fool says, "Have a good time today and let tomorrow worry about itself!"

The world is full of Esaus—men, women and children who sell out cheap—a year's wretchedness for an hour's gratification; a day's pay for a few moments' thrill; a week's wage for a day's dissipation. There is a law of compensation at work in this old world and you will find out that you pay for every foolish thing you do.

"I believe appetites were made to gratify," says the worldly wise one. They were—in the right way. "I believe in mortgaging the future for the fun of the present," says he. Wrong. The mortgage may be foreclosed. "I believe in picking the blossom because it's so sweet," says he. Wrong again. The fruit is sweeter than the blossom and you can eat the fruit—the blossom you can't.

"I believe that other people should save money, build homes, have bank accounts and carry insurance," says he. Wrong again. Their homes and bank accounts won't help you when your tomorrow comes. You have got to help yourself today, if you want your tomorrow to help you.

"I believe in luck," says he once more—"and my luck is bad." Wrong again. Your philosophy is bad, not your luck. You believe the other fellow should work and save? Show him how. You believe that money brings happiness? Save some and find out how much. You believe that winter is coming and you'll need some coal? Wait and see. You believe that money is power? Save some and find out how strong it is.

Before the writer of this thrift talk lies a letter—an appeal from a woman who didn't believe in the law of compensation; who didn't believe in tomorrow; who didn't believe in bank accounts, or saving. She defied all the laws of society, tried to live her own life as she saw fit, and now her tomorrow has come and she has no money. She needs it—she can't live without it.

Out of a thousand bells she knows she is wrong and has been wrong, for yesterday has gone, today is going, and tomorrow is coming fast.

Eat, drink and be merry, if you will, for tomorrow you may die, but the chances are you won't, even though you would like to. Tomorrow will be a sad day for you, if you live today wrong. Today's savings mean tomorrow's comforts, and tomorrow there may be nothing to save.

THE DAILY NOVELET

YES, MY DEAR.

Here is a patent all should use. To save your breath, also your shoes.

"Take this letter, please, Miss Mutch," said Adam Adams, head of the famous Adams Vinegar foundry. "Mr. Seattle Wicks, Wicksburg, Wicks, Virginia. Dear Sir, Yours of the 33rd instant received and contents noted, and would say—"

"Wanted on the telephone, Mr. Adams," said Ariovistus, the office boy. "It's Mrs. Adams, sir."

"Tut, tut," tutted Mr. Adams. "This is my busy day. Ariovistus, follow me with the talkphone. Put in record No. 33456."

And he went to the telephone and said into it, "Hello, Rhubarba? Yes, my dear. Yes, my dear. Yes, my dear."

Rather quickly for an office boy, Ariovistus appeared with the talkphone. Mr. Adam adjusted it to the telephone and returning to his desk, resumed his dictation. Three times a minute the talkphone said, "Yes, my dear," in Mr. Adams' voice, and Ariovistus stood by to start the record over each time it ran down.

At the end of twenty minutes Mr. Adams rose again, went to the telephone, and said, "Really my dear, I'm afraid I'll have to return to my work now. Yes, my dear. Good-by."

And he hung up and winked at the talkphone.

How to Get Household Help

Usually the best servants are obtained through want advertising. Sometimes you get them because you answer their ads—sometimes because they answer yours. The bright girls know that the best places are advertised or secured through advertising. Advertising and answering ads are related methods of finding the best household help—and each method is used by each party to the matter.

HUGHES AND FAIRBANKS.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.

Two futile invasions of Mexico and six separate and distinct policies on the question of permitting arms and ammunition to be sent into that country are included in the performance of the Wilson administration in its dealings with our southern neighbors in less than three years. It is this characteristic instability of the government that makes people want a change.

Bryan reiterates that he is out for Wilson. "Hark from the tomb a doleful sound."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

The stopping of Governor Hughes' auto by a Canadian soldier will not matter, inasmuch as the band wagon's progress is not to be interrupted.

Democrats who harbored hopes that Josephus would catch the virus from the Bryan and Garrison resignations are still nursing their disappointment. Nothing remains for them but to resign to a realization that Josephus will not resign.

"Inadequate" aptly characterizes the Wilson administration, but almost any synonym of unsatisfactory will do.

When Charles E. Hughes said: "The dealings of the administration with Mexico constitute a confused chapter of blunders," he gave an explicit characterization of the Wilson administration's policy in one sentence.

Just as it is now obstinately shutting its eyes to the need of industrial preparedness, for three years the Wilson administration refused to see the need of adequate military preparedness. With war on our southern border it was content to rely on a regular army that could only muster 40,000 available men and refused to continue the established policy of building up our navy.

Charles E. Hughes, the Republican candidate, recognizes an important fact that Woodrow Wilson, the Democratic president, appears to have overlooked—that the United States is big enough to help Mexico in the condition of anarchy in which that country is plunged and, by securing order in Mexico, insure peace on our border.

The insuperable handicap of the Democratic party in this campaign is its record.

If the Democratic national administration had left on the statute books 1,804 the federal corrupt practices applied there by the Republicans there would be no occasion for the present administration's campaign publicity measure, which at best is a very poor substitute for the law repealed.

President Wilson's campaign managers are entitled to all the comfort they can get out of calling the roll of Progressives who are going to vote for him. It would be an endless task to call the roll of Progressives who are not going to vote for him.

For every reason that can be advanced why Progressives should vote for Wilson ten can be advanced why they should vote for Hughes, and the beauty of it is that they know the reasons without having to be told.

The Wilson administration went into Mexico to punish Villa for his outrage on American soil. The only punishment inflicted has been on American soldiers, who were shot down at Carrizal by order of First Chief Carranza.

"Franklin Roosevelt, assistant secretary of the navy, sees a strong trend for Wilson in Maine."—News Dispatch Who can blame a man who for three years has been assistant to Josephus Daniels for "seeing things?"

Even Woodrow Wilson could not save the infamous Clarke amendment to the Philippines bill. He lost the ablest member of his cabinet, Secretary Garrison, because of his advocacy of the policy of scuttle, but even the sacrifice of Garrison could not save it.

WILSON'S POLICIES BLOWN UP.

Charles Evans Hughes did have explosives with him when his motorcar was searched by a Canadian soldier, but they were under the candidate's hat. Mr. Hughes will set them off on his western tour, and some of Mr. Wilson's policies will be blown up—New York Sun
