

THE SAN FRANCISCO CALL
 SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1895
 JUST ABOUT THE WEATHER.
 There was more sunshine yesterday than even the forecast officials expected. It tempted a good many people to make their appearance in the park and at the Cliff House, and set the children on to chasing butterflies. Unless some other weather, some bad luck, the weather will be better to-day, as the prediction from the Weather Bureau is: "Fair; slowly rising temperature; fresh northwest winds."

INSPIRATION AS AGAINST GOLD LAW.
MUSICAL PROFESSOR SAUVELET HAD A LIVELY DAY IN COURT.

MR. SCHMIDT WON HIS SUIT.
EXPERTS DIFFER WHETHER HE IS A GENIUS OR AN ORDINARY COMPOSER.

If the original genius who once expressed a preference for writing the popular ballads of a nation rather than making its laws had sat in the courtroom of Justice of the Peace Groezinger yesterday and listened to certain testimony regarding popular ballads he would have concluded that he had made a most egregious mistake—at least if he took any stock in what was said.

THE PROFESSOR EXPLAINS A DIFFICULT POINT.

matter where he heard that such sweet melodies as "Wait Till the Clouds Roll By" and "Sweet Violets" were trash, and on a melodious level with street-jingles such as "Chippie, Get Your Hair Cut" and "London Bridge is Falling Down."

His disgust would have been intensified, too, when it was stated by one who was supposed to know that there are authors and musicians who would grind out popular melodies at the price of a glass of foaming beer per "mel."

The evidence which reflected so upon those who are responsible for the production of songs, an in doing so, tear the inspiring sentiments contained therein from their innermost natures, was brought out in the trial of the suit of G. Sauvlet against H. W. Schmidt. The plaintiff is a musician, composer, etc., who has seen much according to the best of his ability, and is now located in this city ready to fill engagements to play the piano at private parties, set songs to music or instruct people how to twist the bow of a violin.

He used H. W. Schmidt, who is at present in Honolulu, to recover $250, which plaintiff maintained was a fair compensation for his writing the music to an Hawaiian composition with which the words of which were composed by Schmidt.

It was entitled "Hawaii and Liberty." Mr. Schmidt, however, sailed for Honolulu last August without taking with him the music, and Schmidt, who had been proposed to soothe any savage feelings that might be found in the breasts of any of the opponents to the republic.

The professor was indignant that his master effort should be thus thrown back upon him and unpaid for at that. Hence the suit.

MOST INFAMOUS MAN OF HIS TIME.
THAT IS WHAT ATTORNEY MONTEITH SAID OF PRESIDENT CLEVELAND.

THE STRIKE TRIAL IS OVER.
JUDGE MORROW WILL CHARGE THE JURY AND THEN COME THE VERDICT.

The trial of the strikers has practically come to an end. Attorney Monteith, who has defended Cassidy and Mayne, finished his address to the jury yesterday morning, and United States District Attorney Foote closed the case for the Government late in the afternoon. On Monday morning Judge Morrow will charge the jury and by Monday night a verdict is expected.

Speculation is rife as to what the outcome will be. Some of the people who have watched the case closely expect a conviction; others—and they are in the great majority—assert that it will be a "hung jury," while the strikers are confident that the verdict will be "Not Guilty."

In his closing remarks, Monteith made an impassioned appeal to the jury. He pointed out that the strikers were fighting for their homes, their wives and children and their manhood. He pointed out that the United States troops had been called out without rhyme or reason, and stigmatized Grover Cleveland as the "most infamous man of his time."

The delivery of Mr. Foote's closing address occupied about three hours. It was a most notable statement of facts, and evidently carried weight. He reviewed the testimony which tended to show that there was collusion between the United States officials and the managers of the Southern Pacific, and that there was not a man living who would dare make such an insinuation to his face outside of the court and go unpunished. He defended the action taken by Knight and Baldwin, and claimed that their efforts to prevent the strikers and their friends from violating the law was an exhibition of true manhood.

"I am not defending the Southern Pacific of Kentucky," said the District Attorney. "It is no more to me than the United States of Kentucky. But, gentlemen of the jury, when the laws of our country are violated, and in the violation the Southern Pacific of Kentucky is injured, then in my official capacity I will do my best to bring the offenders to justice."

"Whether it is for its actions in the past or for what it is doing at present I don't know, but there is a strong feeling abroad antagonistic to the Southern Pacific. That feeling, however, is not to be taken into consideration. It is a cold matter of law, and I do not sympathize with you to have to frame your verdict."

Assistant United States District Attorney Knight and United States Marshal Baldwin were attacked by the counsel for the defense in a manner that was most unwarranted. These two men acted in the spirit of true manhood. They went boldly into the midst of the strikers at Sacramento and returned to the city with their heads unshaken. They were not afraid to go to any mischief and yet never flinched. Mr. Knight has been attacked again and again by the attorney for the defense, and he would not permit him to fight back. When called by the counsel for the defense, Mr. Monteith was badgered, and then when under cross-examination I could have brought out a great deal of damaging testimony I refrained, and even then I would not allow the counsel to say a word in his own defense. Gentlemen, you can not fail to have noticed the consideration we have shown the defense at all stages of this long and wearisome trial and you will do your best to give a fair verdict.

"Who were the men killed during this memorable strike? The engineer at his post and the soldier on duty. Call the engineer what you will, he was true to his employer and he went out to meet his fate, knowing that he was doing his duty. The soldier's first and great lesson is obedience. The private who lost his life in that terrible tragedy outside of Sacramento was simply obeying orders. Who were the eight men who were killed by the strikers, or was it the railroad company? That question you will have to settle for yourselves."

In a brilliant peroration Judge Foote summed up the case, and wound up by asking at the hands of the jurors nothing but justice. His speech was an able effort, and kept the attention of the weary jurors riveted throughout.

LOUIS CORRIVEAU'S WILL.
HE BEQUEATHS ALL OF HIS ESTATE TO HIS SISTER, MRS. BOUTIN.

LOVELL WHITE, HIS EXECUTOR, WITHDRAWS TO AVOID NOTORIETY.

The will of Louis Corriveau, disposing of that mysterious $50,000 estate, which no one knows anything, has been filed. It leaves all of his property to his sister, Mrs. Armine Boutin of San Anselm Lane, Canada, declaring that he has already made a full and satisfactory settlement with his wife Charlotte, and he therefore leaves her nothing.

The will is dated November 24, 1888, and in it there is no hint of the probable value of the property, or where or what it is. It is evident from the will that part of the estate was in property, however, at least at the time the will was made, for in one paragraph he gives full power to his executor to dispose of any or all his property at either public or private sale.

Lovell White of the San Francisco Savings Union is named as executor, but will the filing of the will be also filed his renunciation of the trust. He wrote a letter to Judge Sanderson, the presiding Judge of the Superior Court, explaining that he believed the cause was going to get much unpleasant notoriety, and that he did not want to be connected with it.

The will was drawn up by Judge A. A. Sanderson of the Superior bench, who is also a witness to it. The other witness is Mr. H. Harris of 417 Dupont street. As to the whereabouts of Corriveau's estate there is as much mystery as ever. The Public Administrator has as yet found no definite tidings as to any trace of it, except about $1200 collected by H. W. Westphal on several notes which Corriveau left in his hands some little time before he died. It is believed that just before his death Corriveau owned a lot on Mission street, near Eighteenth, valued at $9000, and had $30,000 in the San Francisco Savings Union. He also is reported to have held a mortgage on property owned by Westphal for $20,000.

Collectors for Jacobs, of the Germania Insurance Company, who were after him to collect $1800 due as premiums, and on which they had secured a judgment, claim that to prevent them from leaving upon them, he transferred his lot and his mortgages, and in fact all his property, to an unknown person. Beyond this, however, the estate of Louis Corriveau, the barber, is still lost to the sight of his legatees.

To Expunge Elm Avenue. Joseph Schwartz and Meta Eeka, owners of property on Golden Gate avenue through which Elm avenue extends—on the map—petitioned the Supervisors yesterday to expunge it from the map. The petition was submitted by Ellert and Quirens, attorneys for the petitioners, and declares that the avenue has never been opened and was decided to another individual by the city, and that it was decided to be closed to a street, and further, that the Supervisors did once pass an order expunging it, but that the order was vetoed.

Colonel F. S. Chabourne, paymaster-general of the National Guard of California, is losing considerable sleep and flesh in these piping times of peace. On Thursday night he finished paying the soldiers in San Francisco who were called out in the strike last year, but he has yet to take in the interior towns to liquidate the claims of the Fifth Regiment. The hardest struggle which the colonel has yet had since his appointment by Governor Budd was on Thursday night when the First Troop Cavalry was paid off.

With clanking spurs and trailing sword the colonel entered the army, followed at a respectful distance by Colonel Bergin and Lieutenant-Colonel Bush. The crowd had been awaiting his coming long, for the Naval Reserve had to be his position at the table and had the lieutenant in charge, bringing on his men. First the men who had not assigned their claims were called, and when they were disposed of the unfortunate who had had to hypothecate their claims were mustered. Then the performance of the evening commenced.

The first man called had $44 coming to him. The assignee was ushered in, accompanied by his attorney, and the trembling cavalryman followed. The lawyer and his lawyer made low obeisance to the paymaster-general. Chabourne clanked his spurs and cleared his throat. He was about to enact the role of Portia in soldier clothes.

IT TURNED JOE JEWETT'S HEAD.
MELANCHOLY RESULT OF TELLING A BLACKSMITH HE WAS HANDSOME.

THE DEPLORABLE ENDING OF THE CAREER OF A SAUSALITO DUDE.

A year or more ago Joe Jewett of Sausalito swung the hammer in his father's blacksmith-shop, and made the anvil ring with his lusty strokes, for Joe was a muscular boy. He beheld the British clerk in his "Tam" and flannels pass by without envy, and would turn without regret from the contemplation of the sauntering virgin to forge a shoe or mend a wagon tire. He was the pride of the old man, and the prop of his declining years, Joe made the sparks fly, and did not care the least of a shoemaker whether his face was grimy or not.

In an evil day some one told Joe Jewett that he was handsome. This was a downright untruth, for Joe, though a well-proportioned young fellow enough, had left his indelible scars, and it might not stop a clock, but it would certainly have an effect on the pendulum. Joe consulted his shaving-glass, and began to think his informant was right. It also dawned upon the young blacksmith's mind that he was too pretty to waste his time forging horseshoes when so many lovely ladies were on the lookout for real handsome men. And in the end there is a probability about the forge to the position of a village dude, a something that Sausalito girls might be well proud of.

He put aside his hammer, he abandoned the bellows, the anvil became anvil became hateful to him, and putting his savings together he bought a hand-me-down suit of the latest spring style. At least it was so characterized in the advertisement. No Water street, in Sausalito, he was leading thoroughfare, as, dotted with chowder traps on the seaward side, it winds away toward the reservation. Here Mr. Tenett sunned himself daily and smiled and ogled the native girl as well as the summer resident. But his partiality for the young lady had no effect. So he transferred his fancies to town and became a daily passenger on the ferries. Even in San Francisco Mr. Tenett could not find any one to love him for himself, and his stock of money soon gave out. He discerned that a sporting life is a hard life, and that even steam beer cannot be consumed without the coin equivalent. So he became anxious to go into business.

To a gentleman of his talents the saloon trade offered the most congenial opening, and he approached the venerable chowder king, Charley Dexter, with suggestions of copartnership. But Mr. Dexter was not born yesterday, and concluded that Joe's style was too rapid for him. The young blacksmith could not, after tasting the delights of dissipation and calling the creme-de-la-creme of Sausalito society by their Christian names, go back to the forge. But he must have money, and therefore he took the plunge, and from being an honest, industrious mechanic Joe became a forger and a thief. He went and is still going to the large hardware stores with orders for goods to which he attaches the name of a well-known citizen. The articles he thus procures are mostly of a marine character, and as the individual whose name he forges is a merchant there is a probability about the demands which carries them through. Montague & Co. and a number of other hardware-stores and purveyors of ships' furnishings have been victimized by this disreputable and unharmonious blacksmith.

For some time he has been looking for a policeman to look for him, but the fellow dodges them and keeps on in a most successful way. There was a rumor in Sausalito yesterday that Joe had committed suicide; but the victim of misplaced confidence in his own charms forged an order for a compass on the very day he was supposed to be tossing in the harbor.
