Trial of Michael Collins for Killing Philip Boogar Begun.

REPROVED BY THE COURT.

Second Regatta of the California Yacht Club—Robbed a Restaurant.

In the trial of Michael Collins for the killing of Philip Boogar in Oakland last January the most sensational occurrence yesterday was developed when Mr. Wright, ex-mayor of the Hotel Galindo, came back on the witness-stand and rather flatly contradicted the testimony he had just given.

In the afternoon he testified as to disrobing the wounded man and handing the garments to Marks, a friend of Boogar, as he took them off. So the evidence stood when a recess of five minutes was taken. At its conclusion District Attorney Snook recalled Wright, whereupon the witness said he laid the garments of Boogar on the foot of the bed when he took them off, and that Marks did not handle them.

The point was to make it quite plain that Boogar was not armed on the night of the murder.

Attorney George A. Knight, who appears for the defendant, confronted the witness with the discrepancies in his testimony, whereupon Wright grew uncertain. He said he did not know even that Boogar's residence was at Eighth and Franklin streets.

Dr. J. A. Miller, who was first called to attend Boogar, said that morphine does affect the brain, and that the morphine he gave to Boogar to ease his pain must have affected his brain.
