WEIRD SCENE AT NIGHT.

Squaws Unite in a Cuttara: Chant While Bucks Cut Grotesque Capers.

STAMPING OUT THE FLAMES.

Strange Religious Performance for the Delectation of Carnival Guests.

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL., Sept. 17.—The Indian fire-dance by about 100 braves of the Coahuilla tribe drew a crowd of 10,000 to the amphitheater this evening.

Forty squaws—young, old and middle-aged—sat on the ground and chanted a monotonous dirge in a minor key with unvarying pitch and volume of sound.

Over them a border of alternating American and Mexican flags, while the covering was a black, star-studded sky. Twelve arc lights gave noontide brightness to the arena while the crowds were gathering.

The scene was weird, indeed. The bucks circled around the flames with a sort of jumping-sidewise step, the squaws varying the hitherto monotonous chant into cadences.

When the wood was about half consumed the bucks, with bare hands, pulled out the sticks very dexterously. They sent the fire off with their hands, some times using earth to assist them, and then tramped the remaining coals out with their feet.
