ALONG THE WATER FRONT
Narrow Escape of the Steamer Monticello in a Collision.
RUN DOWN BY THE MARKHAM.
All Vessels Trading Between French Colonies Must Fly the French Flag.

There was a narrow escape from a fatal collision between the Vallejo steamer Monticello and the Statu quo Governor Markham yesterday afternoon. It was only owing to the great presence of mind of Captain Randall that the catastrophe was averted. As it was both steamers were considerably damaged, and the Monticello had her guard cut through and her upper works smashed in, while a projecting piece of timber drove a hole a foot square through the bow of the Governor Markham. There was a great outcry on the passenger-boat when she was struck and several of the female passengers fainted. They soon came to, however, when all danger was passed.
 It was a few minutes after 4 o'clock and the Monticello was backing out of the slip. A scow had her mooring-lines in the way and a delay of several minutes was necessary to clear the way. Just as she was beginning to go full speed astern the Markham was seen making for her dock at full speed. Both captains saw the danger, and while the Monticello was backing out, the Markham ordered "full speed astern."
 It was too late, however, and both vessels met with a grinding crash that was heard blocks away. A crack in the hull of the Monticello was made, and it was found that she was not badly enough damaged to necessitate leaving up, so she continued on her way to Vallejo. An investigation will be held before the Inspectors of Hulls and Boilers.
 The Pacific Mail Steamship Company's chartered steamer Zealandia will not sail for Panama and way ports until noon to-day. The ship is so much freight carrying that it could not all be got on board yesterday.
 The United States Coast and Geodetic Survey has issued the following:
 The survey of San Francisco Bay and entrance, now in progress, has revealed the existence of a rock with 13 feet of water over it in the channel between Mile Rocks and Santa Ana and came to San Francisco on the morning of the 17th inst. on the bearings: Mile Rock, north-northwest seven-eighths west, distant 175 meters; Fort Point light, north-northwest one-quarter west, distant one and fifteen-sixteenths miles; Point Bonita light, north-west one-quarter west (westerly), distant one and three-quarter miles.
 This rock is dangerous to vessels passing inside the Mile Rocks.
 The red whistling buoy shown off Fort Bragg Landing is changed on the charts to a P. S. whistling buoy.
 Washington-Willapa Bay entrance: The P. S. buoy buoy, has been moved four-tenths of a mile south from its former position to the bearings: Willapa Bay light, north-one-half, distant four and one-half miles; the buoy on outer end of Toke Point wharf, north one-quarter north.
 Willapa Bay entrance—The P. S. buoy, formerly shown about three and seven-tenths miles south one-half west from Willapa Bay light, has been changed to the bearings: The Italian ship Salvatori Ciampi arrived from Swansea yesterday in the smart time of 138 days. She has beaten five vessels from the same port which left before her. The Falls of Afton, now out 153 days; Dunsmuir, 147 days; Verjans, 149 days; City of Madras, 145 days; and Glenbank, 139 days. The voyage of the Ciampi was an uneventful one.
 The schooner Barbara Hernster, from San Pedro for Bonaville, lost her flying-jib off the Farallones and put in yesterday for a new one. It was sent on board and she proceeded on her way.
 The barkentine Tropic Bird which arrived from the Colon yesterday, is a very rough time during the last five days of the voyage. She is a stout vessel, however, and like her master the older she gets the better she is. "We had a rough time of it," said Captain Burns, "but, thank God, there was never a gale that would bother the old Tropic Bird." The only passenger was Vi Goding, the agent of Matthew Turner of Benicia in the French group of years. He is trouble with no other vessel that comes to San Francisco on a visit to his sister to see whether it will do him any good. For fifteen years he has almost continuously lived in Tahiti and the Marquesas, and there he says he will die.
 The crew of the Tropic Bird confirm the news brought by the Leon, and published exclusively in THE CALL. In future all vessels that desire to trade between the United States and the Colon, should be allowed a visit to his sister to see whether it will do him any good. For fifteen years he has almost continuously lived in Tahiti and the Marquesas, and there he says he will die.
 Wool is coming to the United States from the colonies in great quantities. The Alameda has 6700 bales on board and the Mariposa will bring almost as much. Besides this there is also an immense number of skins with the fleece on coming. From this it does not look as though Uncle Sam had begun to grow all his own wool yet.
 E. C. Este, first mate of the American ship Iroquois, is in further trouble. As soon as the vessel left at Howard 3 he ran away and going up town began to carry on. He got into a row, and thinking he was still aboard ship drew a revolver. For this he was arrested for assault with a deadly weapon. All day yesterday he was trying to get his pay in order to secure bail. Este is charged with beating and wounding the sailors, and the chances are that if he escapes in the Police Court he will be arrested by a United States Marshal.
 The United States cruiser Boston went to sea yesterday for gun practice. Over $100,000 has been spent on her repairs and it is expected that she will now be one of the crack vessels of the navy.
 The Wrester was well known in San Francisco several years ago. She was built by W. G. Hall sixteen years ago and was at first commanded by Captain Schnaur, later by the ship John E. Two years ago she went ashore on Vancouver Island and the wreck was sold for $950. She was purchased by some British Columbia capitalists, repaired and placed under the Nicaraguan flag and is now one of the smartest-looking barkentines afloat to-day.

ALL LOOKING STAGWARD.
A Number of Clever Players Appear at the California Theater.

The second public performance of the Columbia School of Dramatic Art, which took place yesterday afternoon at the Columbia Theater, revealed one or two world-acres of very decided ability. The performance also showed that the young men possess the lion's share of the talent.
 The three young ladies who claim especial attention are Miss Daisy Belle Sharp, Miss Beatrice Browning and Miss Eleanor Perrin. Miss Sharp, who played the leading role in the comedietta, stated on the programme to be "a local author," was hampered by her leading man, who forgot his lines and frequently left her bereft of replies. The young lady triumphed over her poor support by throwing herself heart and soul into her part and acting with a fervor and sincerity that would have brought her a much larger measure of applause had her efforts not been hampered by her associates. As it was she gave decided promise of making an excellent emotional actress.
 Miss Beatrice Browning had a very small comedy role in the "happy day," but she took so much spirit and meaning into her lines, besides showing herself to be the possessor of an exceptionally fine speaking voice, that she must be classed among the most promising of yesterday's debutantes. As for the play itself, which was given for the first time on any stage, it appeared to have a beginning and a middle, but no denouement. If it did possess that necessary characteristic of a play, it was buried out, so to speak, in the first act, obscured by the memory of the play and made his lines, at times, conjectural. James Keane, who played the part of Miss Sharp's lover, knew his part like a book, but he might have entered into a compact to dismiss the audience by a certain hour, for he recited what he had to say as if he wanted to get the greatest possible number of words in before the umpire called "time."
 The best all-round performance was that of Francois Coppet's charming little play, "The Violin-Maker of Cremona." Louis Buller, as the deformed musician, proved himself to be the real winner of the night by his pupils. His acting was excellent, and as his support was good, he won the applause he deserved. Dr. William Sprague was good as the old maestro, and Norman Merritt acted the part of Sandro satisfactorily. As Giannini, Miss Edna Gallic acted prettily and conscientiously.
 Frances Hodgson Burnett's play, "Tea at O'Clock," is rather a much-ado-about nothing affair, but it received a satisfactory representation. Miss Eleanor Perrin was remarkably graceful and effective as Mrs. Ethingham. Vera Leslie showed ability in the little part of Arabelle Coddington, James Keane did better work as Mr. Grayson than he did in the "happy day," and the two tritely acted parts of General Saboteur, and as Dr. Grantley William Henri was humorous and well made up.
 Miss Helen Traflet, Miss George Elliott, George Phillips, Clement Hopkins, and W. Travers all did good work in knowing their lines and rendering them effectively. There was a large audience present, which did not warm into any particular enthusiasm till Francois Coppet's play was reached. Some pretty dancing was done by eight young ladies of the school, and the following young ladies, who had been excellently trained by Eugene Schmidt, sang two sextets in "Miss Beatrice Browning." Miss Edna Gallic, Miss Adele Stone, Miss Gladys Wynne, Miss Lois Webber, Miss Georgia Stewart.

GIBSON'S CAPTURE.
Davis, a Well-Known Eastern Crook, Is Taken in by Detective Gibson.

Detective Gibson, assisted by Officers Campbell and Wren, made a clever capture Thursday night in the person of Charles Davis, alias Dickson, alias Jack Strauss. Davis is a well-known Eastern crook, and has spent the major part of the past thirty years in prison.
 Detective Gibson was walking along Market street during the early part of the evening when he encountered the ex-convict. He immediately recognized Davis, and knowing him to be a dangerous character determined to shadow him. The man walked aimlessly about for an hour or so, and then went to his room, 430 Powell street.
 The detective called to his assistance the two officers named, and entering the room

I have been made to suffer through your faults. No matter what comes you may always count on my undying love, which even the grave will not subdue. Yet I am hopeful that all will end happily for both of us. At all times believe me to be your faithful and loving wife.
 The wife also wrote that she hoped all would yet be well if her husband "stopped drinking." She regretted he had not answered a previous letter and the thought that he contemplated deserting her almost drove her to delirium. His parents, she added, were still hoping he would reform and return.
 Maxwell was 24 years of age. He was a member of the Pacific Coast Marine Firemen's Union and declared his intention to become an American citizen before Clerk Curry on July 10. A member of the Firemen's Union said that Maxwell had lately been brooding over something.
 An inquest to determine the cause of death will be held Monday. Meantime the parents of the young man, who are said to be well to do, have been notified.
 The Washtenaw left port Thursday afternoon.

KINDERGARTEN CHRISTMAS.
Miss Lillie Fales' Work Among the Children on Harrison Street.

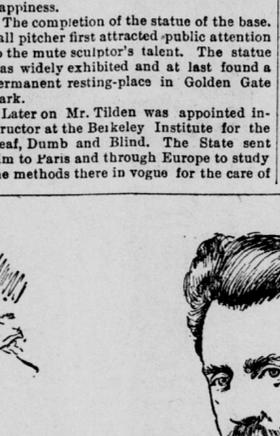

Ninety-five children enjoyed the Christmas festivities at the First Congregational Kindergarten yesterday afternoon, and the patrons and friends who were present formed "a close second" in the day's sports.
 The tree, that drooped under the weight of toys, was an object of wonder to the little ones, who performed very skillfully and cheerfully their share of the afternoon's programme. This consisted of games and songs composed by Miss Helen E. Wright, the author of "The Grasshoppers' Party."
 Miss Lillie Fales has been in charge of the work for three years. She is assisted by Miss Helen E. Wright and Miss Ella Newell.
 The kindergarten is under the direction of a committee appointed by the First Congregational Church. The committee

FRANK MAXWELL'S END.

The body of fireman Frank Maxwell of the steamer Washtenaw now lies on a cold marble slab at the Morgue. In a hospital in distant Liverpool, Eng., is his wife, made sick and almost dying because of his cruel desertion of her. The aged parents of Maxwell, at home, have been watching by her bedside while life has continued to linger.
 Maxwell was found dead on the rocks under the wharf at the foot of Fremont street, yesterday morning, by Boatman Peter Kelleher, who reported his discovery to the Coroner. Whether Maxwell's death was due to suicide or accident no one seems to know.
 There was a letter in one of the dead man's pockets which sheds some light on his past history. It was from his wife, Minnie, dated at 4 Barnmouth street, Liverpool, April 18 of this year, and addressed to a Chilean port. It had been retained to this City. The letter tells its own story in the following extracts:
 In leaving me as you did you treated me with great cruelty. Why did you not tell me that you intended to ship for three years? I became so ill that I was forced to go to the hospital, where your mother and father found me. They watched by my bedside for many nights, and had it not been for their kindness I believe I would have died.
 I have been told that I cannot live long, and when I am gone perhaps you will realize how those afflicted similarly to himself. Since his return he has been devoting himself to his art and is now engaged as instructor in the Hopkins Institute of Art in this City.

 The prospective bride is the adopted and only daughter of L. G. Cole, a wealthy resident of Oakland. She is a beautiful girl, and light-hearted and vivacious despite her affliction, but her firmity has been a source of grief to her father, and he has expended thousands of dollars in efforts to have her voice and hearing restored. She was sent to Europe and kept for a long time under the care of distinguished specialists, but without avail, and finally she returned to her Oakland home and entered the Berkeley institution to complete her education despite her disadvantages.
 It was at Berkeley that the lovers' romance began. Miss Cole became a pupil of Mr. Tilden, and he taught her apparently more than is prescribed by the regular course. When the teacher had completed his investigations in Europe and returned to California the tender friendship was renewed to blossom finally into an idyl of true love.
 The engagement has not yet been promulgated in a formal way. In fact, L. G. Cole, the father, will not admit any knowledge of the matter and insists that only the young people should be consulted.
 Miss Cole, when seen at her home yesterday, confirmed the report of her engagement. A question as to the "happy day," meaning of course, the date set for the wedding, was misconstrued, and she wrote in reply, "Last Sunday." When the purpose of the question was explained she hastened to state that it had not yet been fixed, blushing prettily while over having inadvertently betrayed the inception of the engagement.
 L. G. Cole, the father of the bride to be, is a brother of Harbor Commissioner Cole and one of Oakland's best-known citizens. He was a pioneer of the early days and is now a man whose wealth is estimated in six figures.

FRANK MAXWELL'S END.

The girls of the ninth grade in the Denman Grammar School demonstrated yesterday the fallacy of the old saw that "Too many cooks spoil the broth." Each of the two classes which have been receiving instruction in cooking under Miss Whittaker's direction during the past term served to their friends a delicious luncheon that would have done credit to the best caterers in town, and every dish was prepared by the members of the classes.
 The two ninth grades are under Mrs. Baumgardner, the vice-principal, and Miss Jessie Smith. Mrs. Baumgardner's class had decorated the classroom tastefully and there the exercises were held and lunch served in an adjoining room. An interesting programme was carried out. Among those taking part in the musical and literary exercises were Helena Falck, Nettie Degen, Jeanette Neugass, Ruby Meyer, Alicia Dufficy, Annie Schnezepok, Leonora Ferrer, Florence Hanley, Lupita Rivas, Florence Schrarzheld, Jessica Davis, Gladys Cummins, G. Cunningham, Eunice Jeffers, Maud Hill, Pearl Connors, Ruby Meyer and Olivia Verdon.
 Miss Smith's class entertained over 100 visitors at luncheon. Superintendent Babcock made a short speech, in which he hailed the new woman as a cook. James Denman complimented the class on the excellence of its work. Lillian Quinn and Eulavete Sweetland recited, and Gertrude Whateley played some selections on the mandolin.
 In the class rooms were displayed exhibitions of the work of the members in fine sewing, embroidery, drawing and penmanship.
 Monday afternoon and evening the pupils of the school will give a fair at Golden Gate Hall for the benefit of the Examiner's fund for blind children. The manager of the affair is Miss Florence Hawley. Mrs. Baumgardner's class, being going to be sold in the booths, including the fancy work, ice cream and candy, will be of the girls' own making.

DEAF MUTES TO MARRY.
Sculptor Douglas Tilden to Wed Miss Bessie Cole of Oakland.
NEITHER CAN SPEAK OR HEAR.
Their Courtship Began at the Institute for the Deaf, Dumb and Blind.

The engagement of Douglas Tilden, the deaf-mute sculptor, and Miss Bessie Cole of Oakland, who also suffers from the loss of both speech and hearing, has been made public. The wedding will be celebrated with the advent of the summer months.
 Douglas Tilden is well known in California and abroad. His career at Berkeley and his artistic achievements have found him surrounded by many friends, who will be pleased to learn of his happiness.
 The completion of the statue of the base, ball pitcher first attracted public attention to the mute sculptor's talent. The statue was widely exhibited and at last found a permanent resting-place in Golden Gate Park.
 Later on Mr. Tilden was appointed instructor at the Berkeley Institute for the Deaf, Dumb and Blind. The State sent him to Paris and through Europe to study the methods there in vogue for the care of those afflicted similarly to himself. Since his return he has been devoting himself to his art and is now engaged as instructor in the Hopkins Institute of Art in this City.

MRS. DALZELL'S BOARD.
The Lady Who Married Her Hired Man Sued for a Hotel Bill.
A FAMILY FOR SENSATIONS.
 The Latest Chapter in the Troubles of the Rutherford of Rutherford.
 Mrs. William Dalzell, formerly Mrs. Rutherford of Rutherford, Napa County, who not long ago married one of her hired men, has been sued in the Justice's Court in this City for a hotel bill contracted at the Occidental Hotel, and an attachment has been issued against her personal property.
 That the lady should be in financial difficulties is a surprise to many. And now it is said that the money required by the servitor she wed has hampered her financially, and that for this reason she is unable to meet her bills.
 The bill for board and lodging at the Occidental Hotel is for the small sum of $63 25, and suit was brought in the name of Edward W. Eng, as assignee of Major W. B. Hooper.
 It is said that the lady has not of late had as much spare funds as before her marriage.
 Two years ago her son, George and Lewis, took a dislike to Dalzell and asked that he be discharged, but this she refused, and the family relations were not harmonious thereafter.
 Last July Lewis threatened to kill the hired man, who swore out a warrant for his arrest. The same day Dalzell and Mrs. Rutherford were married. She subsequently told her sons that they had been married by contract two years before, and had kept the matter secret. Both the sons were indignant, but could do nothing. The harm, if harm it be, was done. It was understood that the mother smoothed matters somewhat by making satisfactory arrangements as to the property.
 About the middle of last month George came down here and married Miss Lou Worrell, a pretty telegraph operator, who had long been his sweetheart. The mother objected to their wedding for a long time, but with her marriage to Dalzell all obstacles were removed.
