

“OLD GLORY” WAVES

San Francisco's Fourth of July Celebrated in Loyal Fashion---Our Patriotic City is True to Her Noble Motto: "Oro en Paz; en Guerra, Fierro."

FOURTH OF JULY celebrations in San Francisco are always spirited. The present year yields an excellent illustration of the earnest patriotism of our people.

The people of the Golden Gate never do anything by halves. The celebration of the Fourth of July of 1896 was no exception to this characteristic.

The parade was as spectacular as any Fourth of July parade that has marched with life and drum and bugle and become silent in the years gone by.

Market street presented a canopy of fluttering flags, tri-colored bunting, brilliant lanterns and pictures of Presidents and patriots upheld by wires.

The principal streets and resorts were packed with people all day long and far into the night. During the parade the crowd was so dense that passage along the streets and sidewalks was almost impossible except for those in the parade.

The chief interest in the day's events was manifested by the mass of the people in the parade. It was a little slow in beginning to move, but when it finally got under way it moved majestically.

Above the spectators in the streets the windows and roofs of the tall buildings were filled with faces. Nobody seemed to care very much if a cannon-cracker dropped by the ubiquitous small boy went off under his feet.

The chief marshals were resplendent in their uniforms and sashes. Chief of Police Crowley made a dignified and fine appearance in uniform.

Mayor Sutro was enthusiastically cheered. He occasionally bowed his acknowledgments from a carriage adorned with roses and wreaths.

plauded, and particularly so on Kearny street.

The parade moved at 10:35, and it took an hour for it to pass a given point. It was about two and a half miles long.

All the floats attracted admiration. Many hats went off to the queens, Goddess of Liberty, "California" and others.

The model of the battle-ship Oregon, in miniature, on a float, with a brindle dog for a mascot, was greatly admired. Interest was intensified when it was seen to belch fire, smoke and the noise of war from genuine little guns, which protruded from the turrets just as the big guns do on the real Oregon down in the bay getting her finishing touches.

Salvator Vincent of Napa street was standing on the corner of Market and Montgomery streets watching the parade. A flash from one of the miniature guns of the model of the battle-ship Oregon set fire to one of the flags on the float.

People began to crane their necks when the waving red, white and blue pampas plumes of the hundreds of members of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics came into sight.

The members of the Japanese battalion, with their unique uniforms, their howitzer and carrying the beautiful cherry blossoms, afforded one of the most pleasing sights of the parade. They were much admired. In fact, on picture-queeness, they divided the honors with any other section of the procession.

The countermarch on Van Ness avenue with the bill and clouds for a background, and all the colors and streamers flying in the breeze, and the scores of bands playing, was a most beautiful sight.

The procession was happily free from any serious accidents or disturbances, and the spectators spontaneously manifested their appreciation of the parade as it moved majestically along the line of march.

The small boy dotting in thousands the brown pavement of the avenue and studying the vigilant policeman was very much in evidence here, as along the entire line of march. The Fourth of July is pre-eminently the day of all holidays for Young America, and he enjoyed it yesterday as he ever has and ever will in free-born America.

THE GREAT PARADE.

THE first division, headed by Company A, under Captain George W. Wittman, and Company B, under Captain John Spillane, of the San Francisco police force moved out on to Market street shortly after half-past 10 o'clock.

Chief of Police Crowder was in command. The Golden Gate band followed in advance of Grand Marshal Umben and staff. Marshal and aids presented a typical martial appearance. The marshal was uniformed in blue, with gold trimmings and sash, and wore a white plume.

Major Charles H. Murphy, chief of staff, in a major's full dress uniform, accompanied him on one side, and Chief Aid Walter H. Wood on the other. Behind came the chief aids, wearing the red, white and blue sash and black plume. They were:

First Lieutenant J. D. Miley, U. S. A.; Second Lieutenant John W. Joyce, U. S. A.; Colonel James F. Smith, P. A.; Sergeant W. W. Shannon, E. J. Vogel, Will D. Shea, J. F. Fraser, Nicholas H. Lang, Colonel W. R. Parnell.

Charles R. Nathan, Charles F. Kapp, Oscar V. Gerzabek, David Buck, Harry W. Adams, W. M. Abbott, A. K. Daggett, G. Holland, H. G. Vaughn, George Newman, Dr. J. Albert Noble, Thomas K. Kase, William McIntire, John McIntrife, G. W. Burr, Dawson Mayer, Captain D. McDevitt, Frank W. Tins, George F. Rutschmidt, Henry B. Nibbe, Walter H. Wood, A. E. Eversding, Patrick Lynch, C. F. Humphries, Fred Buttersfield, Charles M. Brink, Fred Blumberg, N. E. Nary, Fred Vetter, George H. Frierum, Master Earl Wilson, J. C. Oland, Conrad Hilderbrandt, A. P. Rhodes, Charles Myall, Captain Silk, E. E. Montevideo, J. A. E. Noble, D. Coyne, Louis Goldstone, C. J. Hutchings, W. Linden, A. E. McDevitt, John C. Slater, Gustave Gunzendorf, A. J. Donovan, James H. Riley, Captain P. Sullivan.

The horses ridden by the officers of this division were all large and magnificent animals.

After the aids marched a battalion of United States troops, headed by the First Infantry band, U. S. A., and preceding the First Regiment of the militia. The battalion was officered as follows:

Battalion—Captain John J. O'Connell commanding. Company C, Lieutenant Frank O. Ferris; Company D, Captain M. P. Maus; Company B, Lieutenant S. A. Cloman; Company F, Captain G. G. Star.

Esigadier-General Warfield, commanding the first division, and staff, followed, making a splendid appearance. They were mounted on fine horses. The staff consisted of:

Lieutenant-Colonel J. G. Giesing and C. E. Hanson; Majors Charles Jansen, Charles H. Murphy, H. B. Hosmer, W. A. Halsted, C. J. Evans, J. H. Manges and D. S. Dorn; Captains S. L. Naphtaly and H. A. Wegener; Sergeants Major E. de Spaar and E. S. Crosby; Signal Corps, Second Brigade, N. G. C., Captain C. C. Boardman commanding.

Three battalions of the First Infantry Regiment followed, headed by the First Regiment band. The second division, or the Fifth Infantry Regiment, with their bands, followed, but preceded by the salors and marines of the cruiser Charleston. The regiments were officered as follows: First Infantry Regiment, N. G. C.—Lieutenant-Colonel Victor D. Duboc commanding. Staff—Major W. D. McCarthy, Captains Alred J. Kelleher and P. J. H. Farrell, First Lieutenants Louis Barrere, Emil A. Kehrlein and Bert R. Hecht.

Second Battalion—Major Charles Boston commanding. Company D, Captain Robert A. Marshall; Company A, Captain John F. Connelly; Company E, Captain Edward Fitzpatrick; Company I, Captain R. Richter.

Third Battalion—Major Charles L. Tilden commanding. Company K, Captain Thomas J. Cunningham; Company C, Captain J. W. Dumbrell; Company F, Captain John A. Miller; Company G, Captain Edgar C. Suttiff; Cadets, Captain J. R. Moulthrop.

Fifth Infantry, N. G. C. Fifth Infantry band. Second Battalion, Major John F. Hayes commanding. Staff—Major J. P. Dunn, Captains D. A. Smith and T. A. Rotanzi, First Lieutenants A. A. Borlini, J. H. Hendy, E. S. Heller, C. C. Derby, Company A, Captain Charles T. Poulter; Company F, Captain George H. Wether; Company G, Captain W. F. Chipman.

Naval Battalion, N. G. C., Lieutenant-Commander L. H. Turner commanding. Staff—Lieutenants W. E. Elliott, J. T. Sullivan, C. C. Dennis, F. W. Harris, A. E. Morgan, First Division, Lieutenant C. A. Douglas; Second Division, Lieutenant W. E. Gunn, Cavalry, N. G. C.—Troop A, Lieutenant Charles A. Jenks.

The Second Division. After the militia came the second division of the parade, made up of the veterans, men who have done more than walk proudly through streets decked in holiday attire; in fact, men who have seen battle—seen the process as well as the poetry of things military.

Marshal Harney Burdell, with Chief Aid Leon Jones and Aids S. M. Carr and A. J. Vining, were in advance, followed by the Second Infantry band. The Veteran Guard of California marched first, Captain J. B. Lanck commanding. Following came the different posts of the G. A. R.

Lincoln Post No. 1, Harry W. Mortimer commander. George H. Thomas Post No. 2, A. J. Vining commander. James A. Garfield Post No. 34, R. E. Kilgore, commander. Colonel Cass Post No. 46, John O'Neill commander. General George C. Meade Post No. 48, J. F. Coggin commander. Liberty Post No. 33, W. J. Park commander. Veterans of the Mexican War. Sons of American Revolution.

Three handsome and tastefully decorated Grand Army floats brought up the rear of the second division. First, that of Seven Pines Circle, drawn by four horses; afterward came two floats of the Gettysburg Circle.

The Third Division. The third division was filled entirely by the First Regiment of the League of the Cross Cadets, who appeared soldierly and well drilled. The division was headed by the Park band.

A. B. Maguire was marshal, with chief aid Thomas H. Fallon and aids D. J. Mahoney, Thomas R. Curtis, Charles B. Dann and John H. Sheehan. The First Regiment of the Cadets was officered as follows: Colonel W. C. Mahoney commanding; Lieutenant-Colonel M. P. O'Shea, Staff—Captain and Adjutant Daniel C. Deasy and A. P. Mulligan; Lieutenants James Devlin and H. F. Sullivan.

First Battalion—Major Daniel J. McGloin commanding; Lieutenant Edward W. Fay; Company A, Captain Frank S. Brady; Company M, Captain T. Dinan; Company G, Captain E. J. Power; Company D, Captain James McBride; Company K, Lieutenant Peter Casey; Company I, Captain P. Haggerty.

Second Battalion—Major James Bronchoud commanding; Lieutenant Edward J. Deasy. Company C, Captain Edward Fitzgerald; Company E, Captain Daniel J. McCarthy; Company H, Captain James Power; Company B, Captain J. T. Carley; Company I, Captain W. C. Clark.

At the intersection of Van Ness avenue and Market street the observer had an extended view of the military approaching up Market street, and wheeling in long columns into the broad avenue. The precision of movement of the militia and their superior soldierly bearing was inspiring in the extreme. The sun glittered on the gold-topped helmets of the men as they turned and marched upon the smooth paved boulevard. The swords flashed. As platoon after platoon advanced further up the hill toward Post street they rose, it seemed, out of the farther end to be finally brought into relief in succession against the blue stage at the place of the countermarch.

It was in the return from Post street that the hot sun and long tramp began to tell on the soldier boys. A private of the First Regiment, overcome by the heat, was helped from the ranks near the grand marshal's station.

The men of the cruiser Charleston walked with the tread of those to whom war is business and necessity. The long cruise through wind and sun has left its ruddy mark on their faces. Each man looked capable of taking the hardest place on a college football team without any additional training.

This division was under the command of Marshal M. Perleb and his aids, Nicholas Mortizia, Captain S. Raicevich, Lieutenant de la Torre Jr., headed by Ramsey's Excelsior band. It consisted of Deutscher Krieger Verein, Captain Robert Wisnecke commanding; Independent Rifles, Captain Schneider commanding; San Francisco Turn Verein, Captain F. Ahtinger commanding; San Francisco Schuetzen Verein, Captain John Bohls commanding;

FARMER BOIES GOES TO TOWN

But the Bland Boom Does Not Wobble to Any Great Extent.

GOLD MEN REVIVE THE TELLER MOVEMENT.

In the Event of His Selection They Would Be Absolved From Allegiance.

SENATOR WHITE OF CALIFORNIA NOW HAS MANY SUPPORTERS.

Sweltering in the Hot Sun of the Convention City Rival Leaders and Spielers Continue the Struggle for the Various Candidates.

"THE CALL'S" HEADQUARTERS, THE AUDITORIUM, CHICAGO, ILL., July 4.

The Teller boom was revived to-day, it is supposed with the assistance of the gold men who would like to see the Republican from Colorado at the head of the Democratic ticket, because the strait-laced Democracy in that event would be absolved from their allegiance to the party and its omnes.

Boies of Iowa appeared at the Palmer House to-day and held a levee. He had several hundred callers and refused to be interviewed for the press.

Senator Stephen M. White of California is mentioned as the most acceptable candidate for the Vice-Presidency, as he would get the vote of New York for a starter.

It is expected that "Silver Dick" Bland will follow the example of Mr. Boies and will come here to encourage his friends.

Ex-Governor Pennoyer of Oregon is a candidate for first or second place on the ticket.

Senator Hill of New York remained in his apartments all day receiving visitors. He refused to say anything for publication.

To-morrow will be a big day. Several thousand uniformed Bland boomers from Missouri will be here with a dozen brass bands and the California delegation will hold open house in their quarters at the Sherman.

JOHN PAUL COSGRAVE.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 4.—There may or may not be some significance in the fact that with the arrival of Senator Hill and ex-Senator Whitney of New York Teller stock went up a few points and his name was industriously buzzed by convention spellers around the lobbies and in the different headquarters. It may be that the gold men, finding that their fight is irretrievably lost, have determined to boom a Republican for the first place on the Democratic ticket in order that the staunch Democracy of the country may be absolved from any ties of allegiance to all party principles.

There is one memorable instance on record in which the National Democracy went outside of its own party and selected a candidate for the Presidency. That candidate was a man of unblemished reputation, and one in whom the masses of the people could be well supposed to place implicit confidence. But the members of the party who had been suckled with the milk of Democracy on the breasts of Democratic mothers could not stomach so violent a departure from political usages, such as that was, and they repudiated Horace Greeley at the polls. They felt that it was an insinuation that within the ranks of the party at that time no man could be found sufficiently pure, sufficiently able, sufficiently great or sufficiently popular to carry the standard of Democracy through the smoke and turmoil of a heated cam-
