PARKER AGAIN IN PRESCOTT'S JAIL

Ironed Hand and Foot He Enters His Old Cell.

Intended Lynching Prevented by a Strategy of His Captors.

Leave Their Train Two Miles From Town and Reach the Prison in a Carriage.

PRESCOTT, ARIZ., May 29.—It will be three weeks to-morrow since Train-robber Parker left the Prescott jail over the dead body of young Les Norris. To-night the desperado, along with Forger Miller, was brought back to his old cell, this time securely ironed hand and foot, and with no possibility of his escaping again.

There was ample fear of the latter, for threats of lynching had been openly made. To-night Sheriff George Ruffner is a happier man than he has been for three weeks previous, as he has successfully concluded a most fatiguing series of travels after the worst desperado alive in Arizona.

A great crowd bid Parker good-by at Flagstaff and many expressions of admiration for his wonderful nerve, and even sympathy for his present predicament, were expressed. Parker said to-day that he regretted killing Les Norris.

"I had nothing against him," he said; "only I was rattled and was afraid he would wing me from the tower. However, what's done is done, and I must get on."

Parker was in the humor and, on the train from Flagstaff, talked a good deal about his recent exploits. He said he had been three nights out of sleep, or Preston and his Navajos would never have caught him napping. Unless Ruffner and Cameron had arrived just as they did he would have killed a few of the Indians easily and escaped again.

United States Attorney Edlinwood claimed Parker as a Federal prisoner yesterday at Flagstaff, but Ruffner emphatically declined to turn him over, and after some sharp words Edlinwood left the city.

They were disappointed, and have vowed to have their way yet. During the ride through town the crowd at some places surrounded the vehicles in which were the prisoners. Miller in great terror cried out:

"Oh, my God, here they come; I knew they would do it." "Shut up, you fool!" roared Parker, and he gave her a kick with his manacled foot. Then he waved his hat at the crowd and called out:

"How do you do, boys? We're just riding about to get the air." Extraordinary expressions had been taken against mob violence at every point, and Ruffner is happy to find in successfully landing his man. Jim Parker's daring and sang froid are the talk of the city.
