

MR. DELMAS SCORES A POINT.

She Is on the Witness Stand Again in the Great Fair Case.

MR. DELMAS SCORES A POINT.

He Has His Opponents Worrying Over Some Unwelcome Evidence.

THE LADY'S WAITING ILLUSTRATED.

More Testimony About the Celebrated Chats With Governor Budd About the Deeds.

Mrs. Nettie R. Craven is back on the witness-stand, and the indications now are that the great struggle over the deeds she holds to two valuable pieces of property claimed by the Fair estate will go on without any further delay or interruption.

D. M. Delmas, the leading counsel for the lady defendant, was also in court, seated at the head of the line of his associates, and exhibited all of his old-time zeal, interest and alertness in caring for his client's claims.

Mrs. Craven is not looking well by any means, and it may be that her physical strength will be found unequal to the task of maintaining her throughout the witness-stand.

She did not remember that Wheeler ever told her that the "trust" will be probated first. The impression he made on her mind, she said, was that the "trust" will be the only one that could be probated.

"No, you did not," replied Mrs. Craven, positively. "Did I not tell you that the word 'my' in the will was different from anything I could find in Senator Fair's writings?"

"You did not," replied Mrs. Craven, positively. "Did I not tell you that the word 'my' in the will was different from anything I could find in Senator Fair's writings?"

Then Wheeler, who had trained his business to the most careful work, woman sitting in the witness-chair, now jerked the lady and let fly the first shot. He handed Mrs. Craven a piece of paper on which was a typewritten reproduction of the contract with John R. Aitken, and she was asked to write upon the margin, with lead pencil, certain words that Wheeler promised to dictate.

At this juncture an adjournment was taken until this morning.

deposition would in its entirety become a part of the evidence for the plaintiffs and that defendant would necessarily be bound by it.

Wheeler and McEnerney argued long and loud to have this stricken from the record, and when they failed in this asked that the jury be instructed to the effect that Mrs. Craven's deposition was not to be taken in evidence.

The argument as to the scope of Mrs. Craven's deposition and her evidence affirming the truth of her declarations therein was resumed at the opening of the afternoon session. Mr. McEnerney asked for an instruction to the jury to the effect that all of the deposition was not in evidence.

Judge Slack finally said he would not give the desired instruction, nor would he commit himself at this time as to the status of the situation. The only manner in which the issue could be brought to a head was by questioning Mrs. Craven on the point.

The attorneys for the heirs were not ready to tackle that proposition, however, doubtless preferring to leave that for a future and more opportune occasion. True, they resumed the re-direct examination of the Fair heirs, but they were content of the rocks. Mr. Wheeler went back to the old story of Mrs. Craven's chats with Governor Budd.

"When you had your first talk with the Governor," he asked, "did you send you across the bay?"

"The Governor said that I should produce the pencil will within thirty days, and that he could send me across the bay if I didn't."

"Were you frightened?"

"Well, yes; I thought from what he said that I had done something wrong."

A YOUNG WIFE SPIRITED AWAY

Ray Torris Weds a Fruitvale Belle, but Cannot Find Her.

Went Away With Her Mother and Is Now Supposed to Be in Minneapolis.

The Husband Declares She Is Deprived of Her Liberty and Obtains Police Aid.

OAKLAND OFFICE SAN FRANCISCO CALL, 908 Broadway, July 19.

Two months ago there was a sensational marriage in this city and now there is a young husband in Minneapolis, his young wife placed somewhere out of his reach, and his mother-in-law is on her return trip to Oakland.

The wedding of Ray Torris of Fruitvale to Miss Belle McCord of East Oakland created a mild sensation several weeks ago. The greatest trouble was experienced from Mrs. McCord, who had all manner of unkind things to say about her son-in-law.

Mrs. McCord forbade her daughter taking her clothes from her old home when she went to live with her young husband. The mother said they should not go out of the house until the daughter came to pack them herself.

Young Mrs. Torris decided to go to her home and pack up, as her mother desired. The meeting was fatal to the happiness of the young couple, for Mrs. McCord stayed with her daughter and quarreled with her son-in-law when he attempted to see his wife.

Torris procured a gun and for a time it seemed as if his search for his wife might end tragically. This was prevented by a conference, however, and it was agreed that all should meet at Northfield, Minnesota, as young Torris intended to go East.

Mrs. McCord at Northfield at the appointed time, but Mrs. McCord and her daughter had gone to Minneapolis.

Torris hurried there, but was unable to find his wife, although he found his mother-in-law. He believed his wife was being restrained of her liberty and he called on the Minneapolis police to help him in his search.

Mrs. McCord is on her way back to Oakland and Torris has written back to his relatives, explaining the situation and asking that all possible steps be taken to force Mrs. McCord, if possible, to divulge the hiding-place of her daughter.

Torris states that he is certain his wife would join him if she were free from restraint, and his family is being searched in Minneapolis, while his relatives are trying to aid him from this end.
