OREGON SAILS FOR CALLAO

Battleship Passed Through the Golden Gate at High Water Yesterday Morning.

Major General Nelson A. Miles, commanding the United States army, at fully advised as to the formidable character of the harbor defenses of San Francisco.

remote from the scenes of activity. The policy of preparation adopted by the Government embraces, however, the protection of this harbor. It would not do to expose the Union Iron Works, where the battleship Wisconsin is in course of construction, or allow the important naval station at Mare Island to become exposed to the raids of an enemy.

The Oregon sailed for Callao at high water yesterday morning. The superb battleship passed out the Golden Gate shortly after 8 o'clock and directed her course south. There will be no effort to break the record for speed in ships of her class, but she may shorten the allotted time of sixteen days to Callao from San Francisco.

There is no longer a doubt that the officers of the engineer corps of the Pacific division are at work in arranging for effective use of the vast quantity of torpedo material stored at Goat Island station. One reason that the engineers have for withholding information on the subject is the fear that a knowledge of preparation to resist attack may cause alarm in the community. The army people have queer notions about the timidity of the civilian class and the dangers that may result from excitement over war preparations.

Recently there has been a great demand for electricians. Many men who possess but slight knowledge of electricity have found remunerative employment at Mare Island Navy Yard, and it is said that the demand for expert electricians is very great at the present time.

The 12-inch breech-loading rifle, mentioned in the dispatches as on the way from the east to San Francisco is destined to hold a position on the extreme right of the line of guns on the hill above Fort Point. The gun will be mounted on a disappearing carriage. The emplacement is ready for the ordnance.

General Shafter, in his last annual report to the adjutant-general of the army, says that in view of the progress of the fortification work at Lime Point and the turning over to the department commander of the armament now in place, it has been necessary to establish a battery of artillery there for the care and preservation of the guns. This battery should be placed in barracks, and he recommended that two unoccupied barracks from the Presidio be moved to Lime Point. It was expected that long before this the troops stationed there would be fairly comfortably housed in the two frame structures that had sheltered soldiers at the Presidio for many years past. When, however, the fortification board, of which Colonel side. These two barracks will comfortably accommodate four batteries of artillery. Besides the barracks it will be necessary to erect officers' quarters and other buildings that are necessary at a post, such as quartermaster and commissary storeshouses, guardhouse, bakery, stables, etc. It is expected that this work will be hurried to completion, and that this important defense point will be properly garrisoned. At present Battery L, Third Artillery, Captain William E. Birkhimer commanding, is stationed at Lime Point. The other officers stationed there are Second Lieutenant Robert S. Abernethy and Captain Euclid B. Frick, assistant surgeon United States army.

Captain Joseph M. Callif's Light Battery C, and Captain Ramsay D. Potts' Light Battery F, Third Artillery, now stationed at the Presidio, will hold annual target practice on a range near Los Banos, seventy miles this side of Fresno. Major Field and Lieutenant Miles of General Shafter's staff, who were detailed to select a good range, found all the requirements in that region. The settlers promised to supply the army with many necessary articles free of cost, and manifested a deep interest in the proposed target practice. The light batteries will march to the range and probably go through Pacheco Pass to the San Joaquin Valley.

Infantry soldiers of the army—officers and enlisted men who walk and fight—are pleased over the prospect that the bill to reorganize the army will be passed at this session of Congress. The artillery and cavalry are organized on the three-hundred-man basis, and the same regulation, they hold, should apply to the infantry. The plan was recommended by General Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Schofield, and is now advocated by General Miles and every other progressive military man in the service. At department headquarters in this city and at the Presidio the intelligence from Washington is gratifying.

The army of the United States now consists of seven regiments of artillery, ten regiments of cavalry and twenty-five regiments of infantry. The entire force, including the two new regiments of artillery, does not exceed in number 27,000 men.

The reorganization of each infantry regiment into three battalions of four companies each will require for each regiment two more majors, two captains, two first lieutenants, and two second lieutenants. This adds 200 officers to the existing number, but the force of men—1200 to a regiment on a peace footing—will be increased to a regimental strength of 2400 on a war footing, without further increasing the number of regiments. Under the new system the infantry strength could be expanded to 60,000 troops without any addition to the number of regiments. Army officers figure that the country has almost doubled in population since there has been an increase to speak of in the standing army.

FORTNIES IN TRADE WITH ASIA

A Field Neglected by American Merchants.

Minister Barrett Writes of Conditions in the Far East.

A Mine From Which Europe Draws Many Millions Annually.

BETTER THAN KLONDIKE

How the Pacific Coast's Commerce Might Rival That of the Atlantic.

The following letter received from Minister Barrett, at Siam, throws out many valuable suggestions to merchants who are desirous of bettering the trade conditions of the Pacific Coast. Mr. Barrett has been in Asia for many years, and has made a careful study of the trade conditions. His prophecy is that if the proper attention were paid to the trade of the far East the Pacific Coast would rival the Atlantic in wealth and population. What Western Europe is to the Atlantic, Eastern Asia may soon become to the Pacific. His letter is as follows:

Korea, Cochin-China, Siam, Straits Settlements, Formosa, Philippines and Java amounted to over $600,000,000 in gold. This year it will probably reach $700,000,000 and yet these transactions are all taking place in lands and seas directly across the Pacific from California, Oregon and Washington, and nearer by some thousands of miles to the latter than to the countries of Europe. San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and Tacoma cannot present scenes of activity in their harbors that will compare favorably with those of the Pacific Coast from California, Oregon and Washington, and nearer by some thousands of miles to the latter than to the countries of Europe. San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and Tacoma cannot present scenes of activity in their harbors that will compare favorably with those of the Pacific Coast from California, Oregon and Washington, and nearer by some thousands of miles to the latter than to the countries of Europe.

Again, were they to travel up and down this coast visiting Vladivostok, Yokohama, Kobe, Hankow, Canton, Hankow, Shanghai, Hongkong, Canton, Saigon, Bangkok, Singapore, Manila and Batavia they would be struck by the extent and influence of foreign interests, the fine appearance of the foreign sections, the well-built houses and hotels, and with opportunities for the pleasures as well as the business of the world, and that is everywhere being made, the growth in population and trade and the spirit of activity that prevails on the coast.

The value of the field is best attested by the unrelaxed efforts of European governments to locate in Asia, and of European steamship lines to advance their respective interests from Singapore to Siam, to the Pacific. In conclusion, I say to the exporters, manufacturers, merchants and other parties who are concerned in the extension of our trade and influence in the Pacific that this market is positively worthy of their tireless exploitation; that it not only now is showing its value by increased shipments and by many additions to the trans-Pacific fleet, but will in the future bring rewards of incalculable extent, and that after many years of careful study of trade and political conditions, the Pacific coast, during which time I have discussed the situation with the heads of nearly all the great business houses and with the leading statesmen of the different lands, I am prepared to prove that a specific and ample opportunity awaits the Pacific Coast of the United States to share properly in the commerce and trade of Eastern Asia. In numerous reports to the Department of State, as well as in letters to chambers of commerce and American firms, I have discussed these markets in detail and pointed out what are the best lines of development. The scope of this letter will not permit extended quotation herefrom.

If San Francisco will organize and conduct a Pacific and Asiatic commercial museum on lines similar to those of the Philadelphia museum, a great step will have been taken, but there are scores of other ways which, if brought into use, will help to increase its trade exchange with trans-Pacific ports. I am, sir, yours truly, JOHN BARRETT, U. S. Minister.

Pinkus, the press agent of the Baldwin, is a STOOD when it comes to getting good cigars and liquid delights for nothing.

The other night he and a number of theatrical men, among whom was Manager Kennedy of the "102" company, were standing in the lobby of the Baldwin Hotel, when the conversation turned to the matter of weight, and a discussion arose as to what figure the perfectly constructed man should put the scales at.

It was not long before the whole party were joshing one another on their respective figures, and Kennedy, turning toward Pinkus, laughingly said: "Pink, if I had your figure I would go on the boards as a contortionist. You are a pretty good sized man, but so flabby that I don't imagine you could possibly hold down over 120 pounds."

"No?" replied Pinkus. "Well, I'll tell you what I'll do. You see that weighing machine over there? I'll bet you the drinks and cigars that I weigh more on it than you do."

"It's a go," said Kennedy, and the whole party moved over to the machine. Just then Kennedy, who is a finely proportioned and large man, paused and said: "I's late, and I have had nothing to eat. Let's make the bet to include a little supper for all hands."

"Just as you say," answered the suave Pink, and Kennedy, stepping on the platform, dropped his nickel and was rewarded by a snatch of a popular song and a card that registered 137 pounds. "If you can beat that I want to see you do it," he remarked as he stepped down to make room for his opponent. Pinkus then got on and dropped his nickel. The wheels of the machine at once started to revolve at a furious rate and would not stop, the tickets coming out in such rapid profusion that it took two or three of the party to catch them. When the instrument finally stopped, the different numbers on the cards were added together and made a total of 59,762 pounds. The machine was out of order, but Kennedy paid for the supper just the same.
