

CLAIMS TO HAVE BEEN DRUGGED

Emma Freel, Aged 13 Years, Accuses T. Costello.

Claims That the Latter Enticed Her Away From Home.

Taken to the Ingleside Coursing Park She Is Given Poisoned Lemonade.

FOUND ON TENTH STREET.

Her Alleged Assailant Locked Up in the Central Police Station.

Emma Freel, aged 13 years, who lives with her parents at Twenty-ninth and Mission streets, claims she was induced to leave her home by a man named Tom Costello yesterday afternoon. Last evening they were found staggering along Tenth street by Policeman Harry T. Day, who suspecting something wrong, took them to police headquarters. Costello was charged with being drunk, and the girl subsequently returned to her parents. Amid tears the girl informed Captain Spillane that Costello met her on the street and asked her to accompany him to the Ingleside coursing track. She innocently accepted his invitation, and after reaching the track he induced her to drink a glass of lemonade, which she claims was drugged.

"After I drank the stuff," she tearfully remarked, "I felt bad and asked Tom to take me home. He promised to do so, and we boarded an incoming car. I immediately fell asleep, and did not awake until the car reached Tenth street. When I awoke I found myself alone on the latter street to Howard. Just then a policeman, who had been following us, accosted us and asked me where I was going. I replied I was on my way home, but evidently doubting my story, he placed us under arrest.

"I know I did wrong to go to the track with a man," innocently remarked the girl, "but as he was acquainted with my father and he would harm me, I will never go out with another man unless my mother is with me."

A short time afterward the mother of the girl appeared at police headquarters to claim her offspring. As she entered Captain Spillane's office she caught a glimpse of her daughter, and clenching her fist approached her with the evident purpose of severely chastising her. Captain Spillane, divining her purpose, stopped her and commanded her not to punish the girl.

"This is awful," bemoaned the woman. "My God! what is to be done?"

A young man, who accompanied her, announced that he was sorry that he had not met Costello with the girl.

"I would not have given a slab in the morgue," he remarked. "Shooting is too good for such a creature."

Mrs. Freel then took her daughter's hand and left police headquarters. She intends to have Costello arrested to-day on a more serious charge, providing she can corroborate the story of her daughter that she was drugged.

GOLDEN GATE LODGE, P. O. E. O. E.

Albion Hall in the Alcazar building was crowded last Friday night by those who accepted the invitation of Golden Gate Lodge No. 6 of the P. O. E. O. E., to its stag social, which commenced at 10 o'clock and continued until 12. Like all entertainments of this character, given by this wide-awake lodge, it was great success. The program was that was presented was made up of short addresses, songs and stories. The committee in charge of the program were Mrs. F. H. Davis, W. M. Joseph and John H. Harney, but the latter was not present. In addition to the programme there was presented sandwiches and refreshments, without limit, to the members and guests. Charles Bates of the Alcazar Theater Company was master of ceremonies, and Jack Coffield was the able-bodied policeman who brought before the presiding dignitary all who were selected as subjects for fines, some for doing what he thought they ought not to do, and others for having done what others were fined for having done. Trustee H. H. Davis delivered a short address on the lodge, its standing in the fraternal world and the charitable work in which it is engaged. Those who contributed to the evening's entertainment were Ed Finner, Dan Hamilton, L. W. Nichols, A. B. Treadwell, C. Bates, William Hoffman and Messrs. Cordell, Bernard, Clayton and others.

A LIVING STATUE.

The Mysterious Case of Miss Wilber, Who Was Poisoned by Carbon Monoxide.

A MODERN GALATEA.

High up in a southwest room on the third story of a house, where every warming, health-giving beam from the sun may enter, a beautiful woman lies. She breathes, she sleeps, she takes nourishment, yet she lies in a trance, like a lovely princess in an enchanted tower high up in her airy chamber, in the world, yet not of it; a type of healthy girlish grace, yet motionless, speechless, unconscious of the loving care that watches over her, of the tender skill of her physician's touch, of the ideal conditions that surround her, facilitating her waking to youth and love and life.

It is just seven weeks since Miss Elida Wilber spoke her last good-night to her family. She went upstairs to her room and lay down for a moment on a couch. The window was open, the gas half turned on, and Miss Wilber fell asleep. The breeze extinguished the flame and the next morning her people found her unconscious. Since that time the accomplished, lovable daughter of the house is gone; spirited away by the deadly music of monoxide poison, and in her place there has been substituted a reclining Galatea, whom neither prayers nor tears will vivify. The gentle heart has grown obdurate, the sympathetic ear has become deaf; the gentle hands do not feel; the beautiful eyes do not see.

It seemed to me when I saw this breathing, living statue yesterday that she was just on the point of speaking. That is the way she impresses one. The pretty color in her cheeks, the round, soft contour of her face, the delicate nose and pure bright lips, and the great eyes, which seem to lack expressiveness for just a moment, as a baby's do when sleep has just left them—the white forehead, so nun-like, so serene, with the fair hair rippling back from the white forehead, one is confident, must be immediately irradiated with consciousness, with intelligence. But nothing disturbs the placidity of the beautiful sleeper. When the whole city and every living creature in it shuddered at the shock of the great earthquake two weeks ago, one child or her mother refused to acknowledge the case and retired baffled. Of the sixteen physicians who have studied the case, not one is ready with the solution of the enigma, which, affecting the brain alone, has left every other organ, every function of the body, unimpaired.

Every physician of note has been called to 228 California street in consultation. All the wise men of the West have been drawn into this case by the mystery of it and the parental care which spurs nothing to solve it. One after the other the elect of the medical world has advanced a theory to fit this unique case and retired baffled. Of the sixteen physicians who have studied the case, not one is ready with the solution of the enigma, which, affecting the brain alone, has left every other organ, every function of the body, unimpaired.

A flower blooming in self-consciousness, a Diana deprived of motion, of speech, of all her senses. Not, not all of them. This girl can still feel pain, and make known her perception of suffering by a faint, short cry that ceases when the suffering is past.

Dr. George W. Fuller, who has watched over this case with all the interest of a physician and a friend, has not given up hope that Miss Wilber will be restored to the world. There are signs of improvement discernible to the eyes of those whose hourly study this strange case is. There are gleams of consciousness, swiftly-passing expressions of eyes and of features that mean hope to the watchers. Never a word has passed this girl's lips since that last good-night. At first she could take nourishment. But now, besides the peptonized milk and beef tea administered through a tube twice a day, the patient has learned to swallow broth from a spoon. Her temperature has fallen, and through the long, slow days and the weary nights when this girl who never wakes, closes her eyes and sleeps, the nurses, the physician and the mother note small symptoms of change, of improvement.

No one may say what effect the monoxide poison has had upon the brain centers, while leaving the body free. There is no paralysis, nor is there hysteria, despite the hypotheses of some of the physicians called in consultation. This is simply an exception to all rules. The sufferer from monoxide poisoning either dies or recovers within a few days. This particular sufferer—the day for whose wedding to Mr. James Dunphy has passed without his fiancée's being aware of it—does neither the one nor the other. She is half-living, half-sleeping. Whether she dreams or not in this strange stupor, who can say? Her arms extended, and eyes only turning now and then as if in grateful, speechless recognition of the mother's presence or the physician's easing touch.

Below the head here is a model of sane, healthy organism, responsive to the every guidance or hindrance the human machine is subject to. But in that slumbering brain that has left the beautiful face uninformed but not in the least vacant, the mechanism is all awry, clogged, numbed by the poisonous gas this girl, while sleeping, inhaled.

COMPASSES NOW SHOULD BE TRUE

The recorded differences permit the making of so-called "deviation cards," giving a correction for each ship's compass. If, by the use of these "deviation cards," if carefully made and used, enable the mariner to correct the indications of his compass, to his ship, to so correct her compass courses, to make them conform to nature and the geographic declination of the charts.

IN THE HANDBALL ARENA.

In the City Courts With the Little Worst Ball.

With a charming day and two well-equipped handball courts, there was no lack of sport in keeping the little worsted ball in motion yesterday.

At Phil Ryan's San Francisco court at 585 Howard street so great was the desire to get into the arena that lots had to be drawn as to which team would get the floor first.

The games played were well contested and some very spirited hitting was made between the contending pairs. The following are the scores made:

J. Leonard and M. Kenny defeated W. J. Dunn and P. Gallagher. Score: 21-14, 16-21, 21-20.

P. Ryan and D. Rodgers defeated G. McDonald and M. McNeill. Score: 21-15, 15-21, 21-17.

J. Hordan and E. Toy vs. J. White and R. Linehan, each side won two games. On account of darkness the final game was postponed until next Sunday. Score: J. Hordan and E. Toy, 21, 21, 13. J. White and R. Linehan, 19, 21, 21.

Those who could not find accommodation at Ryan's hid themselves at Schow's Occidental Court, at 120 Grove street, where a few were provided for in addition to the regular patrons of this court.

The following scores were made at this place:

Kenny and B. Clements vs. J. Shaw and A. Hassell. 21-17, 11-21, 21-14.

SHORE OBJECTS DEFINED FOR DETERMINING NEEDLE DEVIATIONS.

About a year ago the suggestion was made in the columns of The Call that true magnetic ranges for determining the deviation of the compasses of vessels be established in the harbor of San Francisco by the Government. The matter was taken up by nautical men generally and a few months ago instructions were issued to the Coast Geodetic Survey Department of the navy to undertake the work. The result is shown in a pamphlet just issued from the Government Printing Office containing a chart of the harbor, with illustrations of several of the most prominent objects suitable for locating ranges which can be seen by shipmasters on entering or leaving port.

As a rule every vessel, whether of steel, iron or wood, a sailing vessel or steamer, has her own individual compass errors. They may be due to construction, the material and method of construction, including special magnetic effects, and finally to the position given to the compass or compasses on board a vessel. These individual eccentricities are somewhat peculiar, and a chart of the harbor, with illustrations of several of the most prominent objects suitable for locating ranges which can be seen by shipmasters on entering or leaving port.

REVIEWS BY THE MASONRY

Templars Hold Solemn Services in Honor of Easter.

First Congregational Church the Scene of the Ceremonies.

A Similar Ceremony Observed in Trinity Presbyterian Church on Capp Street.

One of the most impressive religious demonstrations in commemoration of Easter was observed at the First Congregational Church last evening by the Knights Templar of California Commandery No. 1.

The interior of the Mason-street edifice was one blaze of light and the ceremony for grandeur and solemnity was such as is seldom seen outside the Masonic Chapel. The order of services was well defined and included in addition to the usual chanting of hymns and the recital of prayer, several eloquent addresses by prominent prelates.

At the first burst of melody from the great organ the outer doors leading from the street to the interior of the church were thrown wide on their hinges and the "Knights," clad in the full insignia of their order, filed into the church in solemn and dignified procession, marching to their place of honor immediately in front of the chancel rail. At a word from the Eminent Commander a rattle of spangles and the swish of cross belts were heard, and the "Sir Knights" had assumed an attitude of attention and awaited participation in the ceremony in honor of the ascension of the Redeemer. The services were opened by the pastor of the church, Rev. G. C. Adams.

From the commencement to the last word uttered in the long devotional exercises they were most devout and inspiring. One of the most striking features of the service was the oras confession of the Knights on bended knee before the minister. The prayer beseeching forgiveness in substance:

Loving and merciful Father; we humbly confess our sins before Thee; we have often transgressed against Thy law; we have sinned from a tender shepherd; we have done those things that we should not have done; we have left undone those things that we should have done; but Thou art a loving Father; Thou art all compassion; Thy tender mercies are over all. Forgive us, then, our sins, O Lord, and may we live with Thee in glad submission to Thee.

At the conclusion of the ceremony the word of command was given and the devout knights formed a martial array. They marched out into the street and thence to the Masonic Temple, where they disbanded.

The sermon of the evening was delivered by the Rev. George C. Adams upon the text of "Christ the First Fruits of the Holy Spirit." The Rev. W. E. Smith, prelate for the commandery, was also in attendance and delivered a short address.

The music was of exceptional merit, being rendered by the choir of the church, consisting of the following singers: Soprano, B. E. Foxworth; alto, Mrs. A. E. Story; tenor, Samuel D. Mayer; basso, J. F. Fleming. The organ accompaniment was excellently rendered by Mrs. A. E. Story, who also acted as director of the choir.

The principal officers of the commandery present were: Commander W. E. Fraser, Generalissimo Charles H. Wilson and Captain-General Frank Titus. The decorations in the church were elaborate and magnificent. In the center of the great organ was an enormous cross composed entirely of red and white flowers. Surrounding the reading desk and hiding it from view was a mass of pink roses, entwined in delicate streamers of smilax. To the left of the chancel rail was the American Stars and Stripes, while on the extreme right were erected the colors of the Masonic Order.

The services at Trinity Presbyterian Church last night were made doubly impressive by the presence, in a body, of Golden Gate Commandery No. 1, Knights Templar. As the Sir Knights entered the edifice the organ burst into melody, playing a prelude which the Sir Knights were seated in front of the chancel. The services of the evening opened with a responsive exercise, followed by an invocation, during which all Sir Knights remained standing. It closed with the benediction, which was delivered with bended heads. After responding to an Easter psalm a Scripture lesson was read by Sir Knight Alexander N. Carson, pastor of the church, who also delivered an impressive sermon appropriate to the occasion. The music, which was rendered by a quartet, was especially good.
