Hale's Isn't a Sensation!

Every new method we've introduced; every turning point out from the ruts of the past, have come simply because they were needed to make the store perfect. And because of these betterments—because this store is persistently different from other stores—these things have been called sensations. All our betterments have been progressive—devised to make the store newer and better and different—started to add to your shopping comfort. But they are not sensations—they are simply singularities.
