LOOKOUT LYNCHING CASE

May Last Through the Winter.

Special Dispatch to The Call.

ALTURAS, Dec. 13.—The trial of James W. Brown, the alleged Lookout lyncher, bids fair to last through the entire winter.

Each question asked of a witness by counsel for the State brings an objection from the defense.

The discussion lasting from fifteen minutes to upward of an hour.

During these arguments Judge Harrington finds it necessary to excuse the jury from the courtroom.

As the lawyers for the prisoner attempt to place before the jury the alleged facts and hearsay evidence that has not yet been introduced through the medium of witnesses.

The patience of the court is being tested, and there are frequent clashes between Judge Harrington and the defense.

The witness called has shown marked reluctance toward giving testimony that might injure the chances of the State.

Peace Myers, whose examination was continued to-day, had heard but one man talk that there would be a lynching in the town of Lookout.

The next witness, however, declared that only the day preceding the tragedy the justice had seen a man who had been strung up.

When the examination of Justice Myers was resumed this morning the witness swore that he had no idea or knowledge that there was to be a lynching at Lookout.

He did not do so, however. "Mr. Beckman would not care for the loss of a mere $5 piece, but he was under the impression that in this particular case it was a matter of life and death."

According to White, Wicksham accused Beckman in San Francisco on September 15, 1901, and borrowed from him $5, at the same time promising to pay it back the next day.

STEAMER LEAVES TO PICK UP SEAMEN OF THE MATTEAWAN.

Special Dispatch to The Call.

SEATTLE, Dec. 13.—The lightship tender Manzanita, Captain W. Campbell, in command, left last night for Destruction Island, forty-three miles south of Cape Flattery and three miles off the Washington coast.

It is believed that the shipwrecked crew of the collier Matteawan is awaiting rescue.

On Tuesday night the Manzanita passed the island on her voyage from Astoria to this city and noticed signals of distress being made, apparently by some shipwrecked crew.

The weather was so stormy that it was not possible to reach land.

Captain Gregory decided to come to Seattle to coal and then go back to the rescue.

This course he followed, departing again for the island last night.

Several things led Captain Gregory to believe that the stranded mariners on the island were the crew of the Matteawan.

It is not actually known that the big collier is wrecked as yet, but she is now twelve days from Nanaimo to San Francisco.

Francis and the crew of the ship's name has come ashore south of Cape Flattery.

The fact that lends color to the theory is that the crew of the carrier will be found on the island that Second Mate E. C. Wilson of the vessel reported to be missing.

The manzanita was familiar with the landings on Destruction Island. At present there is no Government station, with four employees, on the island.

Close proximity to where the wreckage bearing the name of the collier was found by Inspector Gregory.

The Manzanita should have reached the island some time to-day and, providing that the weather is calm, it should arrive at Astoria to-morrow.

It is from that point that the first news will come as to the identity of the shipwrecked men.

There is no question that they compose the crew of some ship that has met grief and storm-swept coast during the past week.

The signals, Captain Gregory explained, were the flashing of red and white torches, evidently in the hands of persons on shore, and made to attract attention from the Manzanita, the only vessel in the vicinity.

The steamer was turned around and the captain beat about the island for some time, but without success.

According to E. C. Dec. 13.—According to advices received here the missing steam collier Matteawan, which sailed from Nanaimo on December 2, with 488 tons of cargo, is reported to be missing.

The United States lightship No. 7, stationed off Umalla reef, on the afternoon of December 10, reported seeing the collier.

The lightship with three crew members, was laboring heavily in the storm, which hourly increased in violence.

The Matteawan's case is very similar to those of the steam colliers Kewanaw and the Albatross, which were lost in a November gale seven years ago, both vessels going down in the same storm.
