WIRELESS REPRODUCTION OF THE GROGGER

Dashed Against Electric Wires and Severely Burned.

Claude Ware, a Soldier, the Victim of Accident, at the Beach.

A dramatic balloon ascension was made yesterday afternoon by Claude Ware, a soldier in the Sixty-fourth Coast Artillery, at the Coney Island gardens. Owing to a mistake in releasing the balloon the aeronaut was hurled first against a fence, then to the ground and finally thrown upon a string of electric wires, where he was severely burned. That he did not lose his life is a miracle. A peculiar incident of the accident was that Ware was making an ascension for the benefit of William Beals, an aeronaut who was killed two weeks ago. He volunteered his services, although he had made but three ascents, in the interest of charity, and the feat almost brought him to the same fate that the man whose family he was assisting suffered. It was considered singular to the large crowd assembled that he was not killed. When he appeared in the gardens after having landed on the wires and ground a round of congratulations was in order.

WARE'S NARROW ESCAPE.

Two weeks ago Beals, who was an experienced balloonist, was killed near the chain of lakes in the park. He was in the act of making a descent when he suddenly released his hold from the parachute and dropped nearly fifty feet to the roadway beneath him. When taken to the Park Emergency Hospital it was found that death had already ensued. Charles Vosmer, manager of the gardens from which Beals made his ascent, conceived the idea of a benefit for the dead man's family, and after a consultation with the owners it was agreed that the proceeds of yesterday's entertainment should be donated to the widow and orphans. Ware, who was practically a novice in the business, offered to make an ascension. He declared that the cause was a good one and that he would assume all risks. His offer was accepted and he appeared on the grounds at the appointed time. There was a strong wind blowing when the balloon was being inflated. The current of air that came from the ocean caused the immense bag to sway to and fro, and when the time for the ascension came considerable of the gas had escaped.

CRASHES INTO FENCE.

Manager Vosmer had stationed four men at the guy ropes to cut the balloon from its moorings. It was understood that these men were to respond to a given signal, but they became confused and made an error. Before the rope that confines the balloon overhead had been released the big bag started skyward, carrying the aeronaut with it. The balloon lunged toward the ground, and as it did so Ware's body struck a small fence and smashed the structure to pieces. Beals, who had dropped lower and the aeronaut landed on the ground. His left wrist had been fastened to the trapeze, and when the balloon again ascended he went with it, hanging by one hand. The crowd stood in terror, knowing that an accident was inevitable. The balloon pitched about, and in almost second Ware was thrown on telephone and electric light wires, and with the parachute dropped to the ground. When picked up Ware was found to have been severely injured on the arms and shoulders. The current burned the rope that connected the balloon with the parachute and the balloon started sky-

Disappearance of Wm. Cadigan No Longer a Mystery.

Remains Are Found Floating Off the Beale Street Wharf.

With features so horribly distorted as to be almost unrecognizable the body of William Cadigan, the grocer who mysteriously disappeared last Sunday night was found floating in the bay off Beale street wharf yesterday morning by John Neilson and Antone Kohle. The body was secured with a rope and removed to the Morgue by Deputy Coroner Mike Brown.

There was nothing in the pockets of the deceased that would tend to establish his identity, with the exception of a bunch of keys and a transfer of the Eighth and Eighteenth street car line, dated October 18 and bearing the number 05543. Late yesterday afternoon Michael Driscoll, a partner of the dead man in the grocery and bar at 1612 Leavenworth street, and John Moynihan called at the Morgue and viewed the remains. They were unable to positively identify the deceased. In company with Detective Anthony they repaired to the grocery with the keys found in the pocket. The keys were tried and found to fit all of the locks, and thus the identification was fully established.

Cadigan was last seen alive at 11:30 p. m. on Sunday, October 19, by Hugh Driscoll at the latter's saloon at 24 Miss street. Cadigan had been drinking to a considerable extent and when he left Driscoll's saloon he was seen going to his home at 1610 Leavenworth street. That was the last seen of him until his body was recovered from the waters of the bay yesterday morning.

The transfer found in his pocket bears the date of October 18 and was issued on an inbound car of the Eighth and Eighteenth street line. None of the light-face figures denoting a. m. or the black-face figures denoting p. m. are punched. As the portion of the transfer bearing the date of October 18 is missing, it is supposed that Cadigan after leaving his friend's saloon walked to Eighth street and boarded a car bound toward Market street, receiving a transfer from the conductor. It is supposed that he fell asleep and rode to the end of the road on the return trip. As the car stops but a short distance from the bay at Kentucky and Eighteenth streets he may have alighted and staggered into the water. An effort will be made to find the conductor who issued the transfer in an endeavor to clear up the mystery surrounding Cadigan's tragic end.

HERBERT LOYD ORPHEUM'S STAR

A Play That Contains Good Specialties on at California.

"Spotless Town" Begins a Week's Run at the Grand Opera House.

I did not see Herbert Lloyd at the Orpheum last week—my loss. Yours, too, if you have not. For those who have so far missed him—though most of the town seemed to be in the big theater yesterday afternoon, Lloyd's turn in the vaudeville dictionary could be called a comedy juggling act. There is enough of the juggling to go round and much less than one wants of the accompanying fun. Lloyd's humor, like lightning, never strikes twice in the same place. When you expect another dig in the ribs it chucks you under the chin, and waiting for another chuck you are caught in the midriff. Just the difference between Lloyd and the others of his kind is the difference between Miss Tyson of McWatters and Tyson and Elsie Fay, the difference between cleverness and gentleness. And Lloyd's, like Miss Fay's, is difficult to nail down. To say that he takes off an overcoat and then brushes his hair before a glass in the back of it does not suggest hysterics, but it goes far to suggest them. Also to write that his disrobing act—the discarded overcoat—"discovers" him in a ballet skirt—conducted behind a screen that modestly reaches to his knees can be rapturously (and decently) funny, is to invite incredulity. But so it is, as funny as the incident that he wears on Mr. Lloyd's nose, or as the dummy legs he tucks on and folds round his neck. If humor be the incongruous and unexpected this humorist has certainly struck paying soil.

There are good numbers of plenty on the bill, a dog act, a tiger among the new ones, that even the Orpheum has not seen bettered. The beasties are Goleman's, and handsome creatures they are. They do everything but talk, and seem to do that. Fussy is a rarely on the stage and one wonders why after seeing these clever little animals. Two of them, a snowy, blue-ribboned aristocrat, and a gray Angora, showed at least as much intelligence as the dogs—with whom they appeared to be on anything but equal terms. The children shouldn't miss these.

McWatters and Tyson have a cleverish and odd turn in "Scenes From a Dressing-room," in which they introduce some capital imitations—so far as McWatters goes, Miss Tyson does not quite get there. She does the monkey trick a la Fay, but there is too much and too many of it. It is not the flash of apish mimicry of Elsie Fay, but a fearful chart of the little brother of man. Her drinking song is much better, though suffering from the same overplus of detail, and Miss Tyson is singing on a sprained voice—one wouldn't mind, but the original happens to be good. The acts end with an illusion, Herrmann fashion, that becomes a little trustful as three nymphs where but one was put in an appearance after the vanishing lady has duly vanished. They bring some new songs.

Wenona and Frank's rifle shooting deserves a better place than at the beginning of the programme. It is stunning. The holdovers are all good. The Waterburys and Tenney play on any instrument that happens to be around and make music. Tom Browne does double-stopping on his violin. Crawford continued wondrous and Crawford and Manning's black face turn makes twenty minutes' persuasive laughter. BLANCHE PARTINGTON.

If you want to see a good knock-me-down-and-get-up-one, one of the regular old horse play and dancing shows, go to "Rudolph and Adolph" at the California. Don't anticipate too much in the line of plot; don't even look forward to high-class farce. What you will see will make laughs, but you will not be able to explain why. The brothers, Charles A. and H. P. Mason, are good; they sing some funny songs and do some funny steps. Miss Bessie Phillips is a clever dancer. Miss Rutter and Miss McKenney are comical as three nymphs where but one was put in an appearance after the vanishing lady has duly vanished. They bring some new songs.

Leslie Morosco and Lella Shaw opened at the Grand Opera-house yesterday afternoon with a musical farce comedy called "Spotless Town." The name indicates a better place than at the beginning of the programme. It is stunning. The holdovers are all good. The Waterburys and Tenney play on any instrument that happens to be around and make music. Tom Browne does double-stopping on his violin. Crawford continued wondrous and Crawford and Manning's black face turn makes twenty minutes' persuasive laughter. BLANCHE PARTINGTON.

SPECIAL ENTERTAINMENT AT CHILDREN'S PLAYGROUND

Columbia Park Boys' Military Company Gives Fancy Drill Exhibition.

The manager of the children's playground, at Harrison and Seventh streets, introduced a new feature yesterday afternoon for the amusement of the little ones. It was the appearance of Military Company B of the Columbia Park Boys' Club. The drum and bugle corps appeared in uniform and added much to the martial bearing of the company, which was under command of Major Sydney S. Peixotto. After a fancy drill exhibition, a squad of little girls was put through a course of waltz exercise, in which they displayed great proficiency. Similar entertainments will be given monthly during the year.

Singing Club Gives Ball.

The San Francisco Maennerchor gave a concert and dance last evening in the Mission Turn Verein Hall on Eighteenth street. The entertainment was given in celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the society. The programme included singing and dancing, after which refreshments were served.
