California's Famous Park

It is very rarely, indeed, that a public official takes a vacation that gives more pleasure to the people than it does to himself, but yesterday John McLaren, superintendent of Golden Gate Park, accompanied by his wife, began a three months' European trip, which, though its first object is to visit his mother in his old home in Scotland, will be followed by a tour of the Continent that will eventually result in innumerable improvements and additions to the beauty and attractiveness of the park as a whole and its pleasure grounds in particular, which is of exceptional interest to every man, woman and child in San Francisco.

To make Mr. McLaren's trip a complete success the Park Commissioners appropriated $1000 to
