WEEPS AS LAWYER ARRAIGNS HER.

Judge de Haven will instruct the jury at 9 o'clock this morning in the case of Mary Louise Bowen, charged with embezzlement of $7000 postal funds, the arguments having been concluded yesterday afternoon.

The defendant, who had hitherto succeeded in mastering her emotions, broke down at the close of George Clark's denunciatory address and wept profusely. She became so dejected that her mother and sister were obliged to lead her from the courtroom.

In the course of his argument for the defense Bert Schlesinger made some sarcastic remarks concerning what he characterized the overzeal of counsel for the Government in attacking the chastity of the defendant, in spite of the fact that there was no evidence whatever in the case even tending to show that she was other than a chaste woman. He said that were he on the Government side of the case he would resign his position before he would go on with the prosecution under the circumstances. Were he in the place of the counsel for the prosecution he would have dismissed the case after hearing the testimony of the defendant's mother. He asserted that he had made similar dismissals when he was himself an Assistant United States District Attorney.

Lincoln Church closed for the defense in a brief and effective address. Assistant United States District Attorney George Clark closed for the prosecution. He said that it was impossible that Miss Bowen could have been insane during the three years in which she had been giving the Government money to Louis W. Baker and making reports remarkable for their neatness and skill.

BOARD OF WORKS CALLS A HALT.

The Board of Public Works held a special meeting yesterday and directed that a letter be sent to the Chief of Police requesting him to stop the United Railroads from running cars over Stanyan street, between Fulton and Hayes, on the ground that they are being illegally operated.

After the meeting adjourned President Duffey went to the scene and found that the cars had been laid on the two blocks, despite the promise made by the officials of the company last week that work would stop pending a decision as to whether the franchise for the street was to be forfeited. Duffey on finding that the cars had broken faith in laying the tracks ordered the cars to be stopped and threatened that if his orders were not complied with he would detail a gang of men to tear up the tracks. The company then decided to stop operating the cars.

The board has asked its attorney, James A. Devoto, and the City Attorney for an opinion as to whether the franchise was forfeited because work on the two blocks was not commenced within a specified time.

The board heard the petition of a number of contractors for a settlement of their claims for street work which was completed and afterward partially destroyed during the disaster. The board directed the City Engineer to assess the amount of damages sustained and under an agreement heretofore made with the Mayor's sanction the city will bear 75 per cent of the damage and the contractors 25 per cent thereof.

AMATEUR SLEUTH'S BOLD CAPTURE.

Takes a Chutes Special Policeman as Hold-Up Man and Relieves Him of Gun BRAVE, BUT MISTAKEN

Hail to Barney Finnegan, honest painter of the Mission and self-constituted vigilante, who catches skulking footpads and deprives them of their weapons on dark outer streets with untold disdain for their means of intimidation but the great pair of arms and fists that swing from his broad-breasted frame!

Barney as a thief-taker can hand the lemon to any pair of teeth in San Francisco. His first capture happened to be a policeman, but the zeal and initiative he displayed made that fact an inconsequential detail and in no wise affects the credit which is indubitably his. The police candidly admit this and pass him the carnations with an enthusiasm that is good to see.

"Credit where credit is due," they declare as they dilate on the details of how he discovered, tracked and disarmed his man. It was a fine piece of daring.

So it was. Barney was on his way home to the Mission around 7:30 o'clock Thursday afternoon when he happened close to make room for a passenger on a Chutes car he was startled to feel through the folds of a man's coat the form of a big revolver. Barney began to closely scrutinize the man, who was wearing a dark suit and had an air about him that he thought was suspicious in the extreme.

"This coat doesn't look good to me," said Barney. "I'll keep my lamps on him and nail him the first chance I get."

The more he observed the man the more Barney became convinced that he had a job on his hands to capture him. The good of the town required it, he reasoned, and he finally took the conductor of the car into his confidence.

BARNEY OUTLINES PLAN. "This will be the frame-up," he explained to the conductor. "When he gets off I'll nail him, take his gun and hold him up with it. It will be your graft to stop the car until I do this. I'll keep him covered, make him get on again and I'll nail him to the top of O'Farrell-street police station after you go to the end of the line. He may put up a fight, but you can leave that to me."

The conductor was not inclined to assist in the capture of the armed man, but Barney impressed upon him the duty that all good citizens owe the city in the face of the prevailing reign of terrorism, and finally enforced on him a promise of co-operation.

When the man got off the car Barney was at his heels. He waited until the man got almost on the other side of the street. Then he got busy. "Hey there!" he called to him. "You don't happen to have a gun about you?"

Scarcely a word, the man switched round instantly. "You bet I have," he answered, drawing it and I'm there with it when necessary."

The revolver, a 38-caliber, was no sooner leveled than the intrepid Barney had the man's wrist wrenched and turned outward. There was a brief struggle, and when it ended Barney had the gun and was challenging its owner.

CAPTURES THE SPECIAL.

"Up with your hands!" he called, poking it into the man's face. The man's hands shot aloft, and in another second Barney was backing him to the waiting car, to the consternation of the other passengers. Once aboard the car the man protested that he was a special policeman, employed at the Chutes. He exhibited his star to prove his story, but Barney refused to listen to him.

"That's an old game with you grafters," said Barney. "You might just as well shut up and wait till we reach the police station before trying to make explanations."

The man kept protesting, however, and cried loudly when the car was approaching the Chutes and he saw another special policeman on guard. He shouted to the latter, and the car came to a second standstill. The special at once verified the man's story, explaining that he was T. B. Blackman, a special policeman employed around the Chutes. Barney was crestfallen, and when Blackman told him he was under arrest, handed over the gun and accompanied the pair to the park police station. He was released at once when he explained himself. It wouldn't be right, declared the police, to have a man of Barney's caliber in the tanks when the town was actually being stalked by holdup men.

"Go home," they said to him. "You might have better luck next time." Barney went, and was seen to be closely eyeing dark places as he passed up Stanyan street.
