

CAPTAIN AND WIFE GO DOWN WITH BARK AT SEA

CRASH IN DARKNESS Surviving Ship Completes Adventurous Voyage Begun 275 Days Ago

Balling into its haven on the eve of the day of peace on earth and sea, the American ship Atlas, Captain Sart, dropped anchor off Meigs wharf last night, 275 days out from Baltimore. It ended a voyage made tragic by collision with the Norwegian bark at Cape Horn, attended by the sinking of another vessel, the drowning of the fated craft's captain and the captain's wife, mutiny on its own decks and death among its crew.

On June 6, at 5 p. m., the Atlas struck the Norwegian bark at Cape Horn. The American ship, crawling over tangled shrouds and dangling booms. But Captain Peterson and his wife were not among those who made the dangerous trip. The crew of the Atlas said that they heard voices calling from the swirling waters of the cape—calling for help.

But it was too dark to render aid, though the Atlas stood by during the night. In the throbbing seas the ship and bark were separated. No one on the Atlas knew where the Viking went, for in the morning there was not a spar floating on the seas.

The late sun cast its light over the waters of the cape the men on the Atlas made a sad appraisal of their own plight. All hands were safe and 13 men from the lost Viking had climbed to the Atlas deck when the ships touched. The American craft had her foretopgallant mast and lower yards of the foremast carried away when the Viking passed to oblivion.

With it went the jibboom. Several plates in the bow were stove in and the stern was twisted. There were 12 feet of water in the hold and the ship was leaking at the rate of three feet an hour.

But it was not to be the end of the voyage. The apparatus was not sufficient to pump out the water that rushed in. A bucket brigade was formed by Captain Sart. Following the tactics of a village fire department, the crew of the Atlas battled with the other savage element of nature.

Rio de Janeiro was the nearest port at which the ship could seek repairs. His head was bent back up the South American coast, the crew still working in bucket brigade formation. Rio was reached 29 days after the disaster off the cape.

By August 26 the Atlas had been repaired and was ready to proceed to San Francisco. The trials were soon to begin afresh. Twenty seamen from as many strange seas had shipped at Rio for the trip to San Francisco. Two of the crew said that McDonald, the first mate, had a pistol and was going to kill them. According to the reports brought in last night the captain told the crew to get the revolver from the officer, that they did, but they refused to work unless McDonald was put in irons. To appease the mutinous sailors Sart ordered McDonald into irons, where he stayed the remainder of the voyage.

The captain of Cape Horn three of the ship's company met them. On May 23 J. Schumacher and Charles Nolan, seamen, fell from the jibboom and were drowned. On June 15 John Hook, sail maker, died and was buried at sea. When the ship arrived yesterday the captain's son and the third officer were ill and the vessel was ordered into quarantine.

The Atlas had a cargo of coal for the United States government. The vessel had been 120 days out from Rio and was overdue. Reinsurance had been offered at 10 per cent.

The Viking was a new bark of 2,541 tons. Nothing had been heard of it after it began its last voyage until the Atlas brought in the tidings last night.

McCARTHY'S DICTATORIAL METHODS ARE RESISTED

Union Men Up in Arms Over Order Affecting Mills Building Work

P. H. McCarthy's dictatorial sway over the building trades union of San Francisco is to be put to the test, in a certain degree, tomorrow morning at 8 o'clock at the Mills building. There might start then a general unrest between the building trades council and the executive committee.

J. M. Robinson, business manager for the D. O. Mills interests, and Willis Polk, the architect representing D. H. Burnham & Co., in charge of the construction work, will present to the men employed in the building the alternative of obedience or disobedience to the latest P. H. McCarthy ruling regarding work on the elevators in the Montgomery street structure.

McCarthy and the executive committee of the building trades council have ordered that steam pipe connections to the elevator apparatus be fitted by members of the steam fitters' union rather than by the members of the elevator constructors' union, affiliated with the American federation of labor and the building trades, too.

Union men employed in the building were instructed to wait 24 hours before taking the walking delegate for McCarthy's organization. According to Robinson and Polk, who witnessed the movements of Clancy, he was nearly mobbed by the mechanics in the building when they were told to work, under a penalty of $50 for every day they would work after the job was declared unfair.

With a fine discrimination of words, McCarthy insists that he did not order the building trades members to quit work. He declared with fervor that if Robinson or Polk said that he or Clancy ordered the men off the Mills building they said what was not true. He said that the building trades organization took in the events leading up to the walkout, McCarthy admitted that Clancy went to the building and told the men of the conditions there, but that the job was not to be done.

That is all that can be done under the law," McCarthy judicially explained. "Many courts, including Judge Wallace, have held that a union has the right to picket a building under certain conditions exist on a job. As for ordering the men to quit—no, that could not be done."

McCarthy tried to emphasize the idea that there is no question of wages or of the council, ordered the change. But in spite of the McCarthy declaration that the men were not ordered to quit work, no one was working on the Mills building yesterday except the elevator men. The union men were polishing a section of terrazzo flooring that had to be completed or spoiled.

In discussing the situation on the building Willis Polk said: "There is no question of wages or of the council, ordered the change. But in spite of the McCarthy declaration that the men were not ordered to quit work, no one was working on the Mills building yesterday except the elevator men. The union men were polishing a section of terrazzo flooring that had to be completed or spoiled."

The elevator constructors' union is affiliated with the American federation of labor and the men have working cards from the building trades council. That council ruled that the pipe connections to the elevators should be made by members of the plumbers' and steam fitters' union and not by the elevator men. It has always been the custom for the elevator men to do that work. So far as the elevator work is concerned we have first to look to the contractors to do it, but we intend to have it done by the contractors, not by the men who will do the job after it is finished. We shall then complete the building ourselves. We shall call for union labor, but if that cannot be secured we will get men to do the work. This matter was started by McCarthy as a move in his fight with Samuel Gompers, president of the American federation of labor. The Mills building is the only building in the city that has not a single grievance. They did not want to leave the place and had almost to be driven off by the walking delegate. They nearly mobbed Clancy this morning, and two policemen had to come and quiet the men. However, under the rules of the union they had to quit or be fined $50 for every day they would work.

Robinson spoke to the same effect. He added that McCarthy had agreed, when work was first started on the Mills building, that there should be no strikes. "Thursday morning," said Robinson, "I will call all the mechanics into the rounds here and ask them if they are going to work. I shall state the case to them. We shall finish this job. McCarthy, in his turn, declared that it was not he, but the executive committee of the council, that had ordered the cessation of the work at the Mills building. "Just because the work has heretofore been done by the elevator men, and not by the steam fitters, is no reason why a change should not be made. In every other big city in the United States the steam fitters do that sort of work," he said.

When asked why it was that certain work was taken out of the hands of one body of union men and put into the hands of another, he said: "I adopted the voice of oratory he adopted during the last campaign and said the elevator men were no longer union men because they had disobeyed the rule of the laborers. He continued: 'They shouldn't get mad about what the executive committee has done, but they should be grateful to the committee for not having taken the work away sooner.'"

McCarthy trouble has been felt in building circles. H. J. McCoy, secretary of the Young Men's Christian association, said yesterday that the strike may interfere with the erection of the Young Men's Christian association building, corner of Golden Gate avenue and Leavenworth street. McCoy explained that the committee on the new building was anxious that when once the work had been started nothing should hinder its rapid completion. The lot is now being excavated.

House of worship to be erected by the congregation of the Howard Street Methodist Episcopal church at the corner of Howard and Harriet streets, as it is pictured in the plans of the architects. Excavating for the foundation has already been completed.

GREAT SINGERS' VOICES ENTOMBED FOR CENTURY

Records and Talking Machine Placed in Vault of Opera House

PARIS, Dec. 24.—There was a unique ceremony this afternoon in the subterranean passages of the opera house. It consisted in depositing in a specially prepared vault a talking machine with disks bearing records of the voices of the greatest singers of the twentieth century. The records were those of Scotti, Plancon, Patti, Melba, Calve and others, as represented in the selection.

These disks are in double boxes, each separate from the other. Neither light nor air can reach the coverings, and it is believed they thus can be preserved for a century. At the end of 100 years they will be opened and the people of that age will have the opportunity of hearing voices of this era as well as seeing the talking machines as manufactured today.

appropriating the funds of the organization to meet election expenses. The purpose of Zant's suit is to obtain a writ of mandate from the court ordering that he be restored as a delegate to the building trades council, from which he was expelled December 19. Judge Seawell yesterday signed an alternative writ of mandate, returnable January 6.

The defendants, with the building trades council itself, are P. H. McCarthy, O. A. Tveitmo, Henry Thieler, A. E. Smith, William Kelly, George Grieve, T. J. Doyle, William Flagler and J. J. Mahoney. The charges Zant made against McCarthy and Tveitmo are practically the same as those he has already publicly made. Because he opposed McCarthy's candidacy for mayor, he says, the officers of the building trades council, in a conspiracy favorable to the interests of the council or of the unions affiliated with it, in October and November, Zant charges, several thousand dollars were withdrawn from the treasury of the building trades council and expended in promoting the candidacy of P. H. McCarthy for mayor and of Frank McGowan for district attorney. Of the sum so expended, $5,000 went to the Evening Post, and $1,000 was eaten up by McCarthy's political paragon.

Prior to December 19, when Zant was expelled from the council, he had frequently declared that there should be an examination of the books of the council, and that if criminal misappropriation of the funds were found to have taken place, there should be prompt prosecution of the criminals. He said that if the council refused to do this, a conspiracy was formed by McCarthy and Tveitmo to have him expelled, because they wished to punish him for his lawful exercise of his citizenship and for his faithful fidelity to the spirit of the American federation of labor, and because they wished to prevent a thorough investigation of the books. In accordance with this conspiracy, Zant said, he was expelled December 19.

E. H. McCarthy tried to meet the charges made by Zant with grandiloquent condescension. "Zant," he said, "with bromide earnestness, 'is more to be pitied than feared. He is—well, poor Zant! I feel sorry for him. He is not to blame.' "But would you say anything in answer to the charges?" was asked. "They are regularly filed, and must be answered in court," he said. "Poor Zant!" echoed McCarthy. "He isn't a unionist!" "But he belongs to the American federation of labor." "Well," re-echoed McCarthy, "Zant isn't a unionist either."

"Yes," McCarthy continued, "Zant left Eureka when he was up there under the name of Thomas Edwin. See what that means." Who asked concerning the allegation made by McCarthy that Zant had used an assumed name, Zant explained freely the circumstances. "I used the name of Thomas Edwin once, but three times," he said, "and I did it in the name of organized labor. I was up in Eureka organizing the wood choppers and millmen, and was there during the strike. I was followed by the detectives of the mill owners, and when I would travel I took the name of Thomas Edwin, my christian name, that I might hide my movements."

Zant declared that after he was cast out of the McCarthy organization last week, his own union, carpenters and joiners' No. 483, by a two-thirds vote elected him its single delegate to the state building trades convention at Santa Cruz in January.

In the complaint filed by Zant he related to some extent the machinations of the McCarthy ring to cast him from the building trades council. He declared that when he was accused the details of the offense alleged against him, contrary to the rules of the council, were omitted from the complaint. He declared that he did not receive the specifications until 6 o'clock on the day of the trial, which began at 7, and that they were prepared by C. A. Tveitmo, and were entirely different from the general allegations of the original complaint.

Zant SUES MCCARTHY Secures Alternative Writ of Mandate and Charges Conspiracy

Thomas E. Zant, the delegate from the carpenters and joiners' union to the building trades council, whose active part in the recent election was a thorn in the side of McCarthy, president of the council and candidate for mayor, filed suit yesterday charging McCarthy, O. A. Tveitmo and other officers of the council with conspiracy and with
