

Lisbon Quiet While Widower Queen Mourns at Pier in Guarded Palace

HIGH PERSONAGES IN REGICIDE PLOT

regiment tonight and the revolution into which the instigators of the bloody events of yesterday had hoped to plunge the country has not yet engulfed the nation. Franco, the dictator and real commander of the country's destinies, whom the moral and physical forces of all parties and powerful interests has not succeeded in destroying, remains the triumphant leader, not only unconquered and unafraid, but re-entrenched in power with the boy monarch and determined at all hazards to prevent further violence and preserve the monarchy.

The only indication that peace and order in Portugal had been broken came from Oporto in the form of a rumor that a republic had been proclaimed there, but this was not confirmed. Lisbon, on the contrary, seems sincerely prostrated with grief. The streets are silent, and the people, weary of all political and physical interests, remains the triumphant leader, not only unconquered and unafraid, but re-entrenched in power with the boy monarch and determined at all hazards to prevent further violence and preserve the monarchy.

BLAME REVOLUTIONISTS

The shooting of the king in the back calls forth words of execration on the regicides, while the government declares that the cause of the monarchy and the assurance of the people. The army apparently still is loyal and no organized movement of the republicans to launch a republic is underway, so far as outward appearances go.

Nevertheless, subdued excitement pervades the city, whose population still is fearful that the crimes will be followed by other bloodshed and are only the prelude to a series of national disasters.

The republicans disclaim responsibility for the assassinations, which they lay at the doors of the anarchists, but the identification of a dead regicide as a cavalry sergeant, accepted by many officials as proof that the assassinations were the work of revolutionaries, who had successfully spread the propaganda, smuggled in arms and bombs and headed off by prominent republicans, plotted to proclaim a republic a fortnight ago. It is also recalled that it was officially given out by the police that an elaborate plot had been prepared for an uprising during the anniversary of the revolt at Oporto. The plot included the assassination of Franco during the night, a general rising at daybreak, the cutting of all wires and the seizure of the reins of government.

ROSE QUEEN'S ARMOR

While the bodies of the slain monarch and the crown prince rested on the biers in the royal palace, surrounded by a guard of honor, Prince Manuel, yet in his teens, was solemnly proclaimed king by the council of state. Later his proclamation, ordering the promotion of the good of the fatherland and the integrity of the kingdom was read to the populace.

THE ACCOUNTS OF THE ASSASSINATION

very, but it has been established that the assassination occurred at the praca do Comercio after the members of the royal family had alighted from the train at Barrero and thence crossed the Tagus on a ferryboat to the Lisbon landing, where they entered a carriage and were driven off.

A smiling maiden had offered a beautiful bouquet of roses to the queen, and it was with these that the queen later in a flood of tears, vainly sought to protect her son from death. Manuel himself, his father and brother mortally wounded, drew a revolver and fired repeatedly at the murderers until his arm was struck by an assassin's bullet.

QUEEN GRIEF STRICKEN

All last night Queen Amelie, in the palace, sat between the biers on which rested the bodies of her husband and her son, prostrated with grief. Troops guarded the palace, a squadron of cavalry patrolled the streets, and Premier Franco passed the night, special details were drawn up before public buildings, and reserves were quartered in barracks ready for a call to arms.

But Lisbon did not sleep. Scarcely a soul in the city closed eyes. An unnatural silence pervaded the place, for with the cessation of the shops and cafes were closed, the doors of theaters were hastily locked, houses were barricaded and the streets were cleared. No one might say where the next blow would fall, and fear of revolution swept through the city like a fire in dry places drove the people into their homes or other places where they might be secure. The attack on the royal family, however, had the opposite effect, for the streets were quiet and peace and quiet reigned as though no murder had been done.

PROCLAIMS NEW KING

Early this morning Premier Franco proclaimed the accession of Prince Manuel to the throne. The naval and military chiefs, the high dignitaries of state swore allegiance to the new king, and Portugal still lived under a monarchy.

No more beautiful day could dawn than that marking the date on which King Carlos and Crown Prince Luiz met their death at the hands of assassins. Returning from a sojourn at the king's estate at Villa Viosa, accompanied by the queen, the crown prince and infant Manuel, the sovereigns seemingly was in a happy mood when he stepped into the carriage in waiting at the railroad station. Thousands of spectators gaily attired in combination of the bright colors met out to welcome the royal family, made an animated scene. All the surrounding streets were filled with gay, light hearted throngs waiting to greet the king and queen. The carriage was stationed all along the route, no one had thought of the murders to come. The people were allowed to come and go as freely as they pleased, and for a short time so great were the crowds, the driver of the royal carriage had difficulty in making a start.

SHOTS CHANGE GAY SCENE

The entire court, ministers, ladies in waiting and many officers, were in the station when the train drawing the royal family pulled in. Among those in the throngs without were tremendous numbers of the working classes, who, having completed their labors for the week, were sauntering through the streets chatting and laughing and ready to welcome the returning king as an incident offering contrast to the monotony of their everyday existence. Other, enthusiastic members of various political factions and friends of political leaders now under arrest, also had assembled to see the king, who came back to Lisbon at the end of a day which was marked by the sternest of repressive measures.

It was because of the beautiful weather that an open carriage was in waiting for the royal family, and when they took their places they were greeted with some lifting of hats, but mostly in silence. Then, as the carriage sharply turned into the Rua do Arsenal, there was a crackling of guns and a shower of bullets tore their way into the bodies of the king and crown prince and the little prince, who proved an easy target. The assassins, numbering six in all, boldly ran up to the sides of the carriage and poured in a hail of lead before the monarchs were able to intervene. The king and crown prince, half rising, fell back into the cushions, bleeding from many wounds.

FALLS ON KING'S BODY

The coachman brought his whip across the face of the monarchs, and with a bound they dashed away, disappearing into the arsenal quadrangle. The panic-stricken people, who had fled on all sides, could see the queen leaning over the crown prince and her younger son, who also was bleeding from wounds made by the assassins' bullets.

How many a soul did no one could say, but it was a fusillade coming from the right side of the street. The effort of the crown prince, who was sitting opposite the king, to rise was pitifully without avail, for he just lifted himself sufficiently to pitch forward and fall over the prostrate body of his father.

Queen Amelie, uttering a scream that could be heard by all, struck her head on the ground, threw herself toward her sons, shielding their bodies with her own. She frantically struck at the murderers with a bouquet of roses which she had been carrying, but even in the face of this the men fired again and again.

As he saw his father and his brother fall Prince Manuel whipped out a revolver and discharged it at the men, but was himself struck on the right arm by a bullet from a carbine. A footman in the carriage also was wounded, and it was stated that a bullet grazed the queen's shoulder, but did not do her harm.

RIDDLE ASSASSINS

Only mounted police accompanied the carriage, as the king had refused military escort. The attack came from the rear, but it was found afterward that the king had been shot in the back of the neck, and it was so entirely unexpected that the murderers had emptied their carbines and revolvers almost before the police knew what was going on. The king, now panic stricken, had dropped back before their weapons. Then the guard charged upon them, pushing them down the street and firing three times with his revolver. Hundreds of people joined in the pursuit and the others of the band of assassins were made prisoners.

The royal carriage had been by this time driven into the arsenal square and the gates of the arsenal were shut.

The grief of Queen Amelie and Prince Manuel was heart breaking. Within a few minutes the queen mother, the Dowager Queen Marie Pia, the duke of Braganza, the king's brother, and ministers of state had assembled, all weeping bitterly.

The news of the assassination spread rapidly and thousands of people, bewildered and terrified, poured into the arsenal square. The crowd, which cupped all the prominent places and the people hurried to their homes and barricaded the doors and windows to await in fear the unknown future. The strictest measures were taken by the officers in charge of the troops to suppress the first sign of disorder, but their work was light. There have been no disturbances in Lisbon in the last 24 hours, and Sunday passed off only in the deepest gloom, with the populace mourning on every hand.

FUNERAL FEBRUARY 10

The bodies of the king and crown prince were taken to the royal palace and beside them the queen sat throughout the night, sometimes with her hand pressing the forehead of King Carlos and sometimes stroking the face of the dead crown prince. The conditions under which the bodies of King Manuel, satisfactory to the physicians in attendance. His wounds are not severe, and if there are no complications, of which there are no signs now, he is expected to recover speedily. His arm is ailing and he says he suffers no pain.

The bodies of King Carlos and Prince Luiz were embalmed today and will lie in state, according to the custom of the court. The funeral probably will be held on February 10.

Having proclaimed the accession of Manuel to the throne, Premier Franco announced his intention to adopt the oath of allegiance to the new king, and the chamber of deputies, the premier announced the house of peers will be convoked to recognize the accession of Manuel, and he then again take the oath of allegiance.

CONTINUES DICTATORSHIP

The army and navy have sworn allegiance to Manuel, as well as all the garrisons and naval stations in the kingdom, and the new king has confirmed the dictatorship.

Later in the day came a solemn proclamation that sweeps through the city like a fire in dry places drove the people into their homes or other places where they might be secure. The attack on the royal family, however, had the opposite effect, for the streets were quiet and peace and quiet reigned as though no murder had been done.

IDENTIFY CHIEF REGICIDE

During the day Queen Amelie was visited by Senhor Pinto, former minister of war, the chief of the conservatives. The chief of the nationalists and a large number of military officials also called to express their deepest sympathy. She has received condolences from all quarters of any countries, and from every quarter comes evidence to the Portuguese that the crime which caused her bereavement is viewed with horror.

The government has given out a statement that yesterday's event was only strength in the monarchist sentiment, both among the civil and military classes of the nation; that the discipline and temper of the troops is unflinching.

The principal regicide killed has been identified as Manuel Bulca, a sergeant in the Seventh cavalry and a teacher in an elementary school. For three years he acted as a private tutor in this city. He was about 30 years old.

The two other assassins who were killed are believed to be Portuguese. The police, however, refuse to make public the result of their inquiries of the men under arrest. An official report of the tragedy, which was given out by the government tonight to the newspapers, reads as follows:

The king, queen and crown prince were riding in the first carriage from the villa outside of the city. Prince Manuel and officers from the royal palace were in the second carriage. In front of the Praca do Comercio a man armed with a carbine suddenly broke through the front row of the crowd and shot at the king. The distracted queen tried to shield the crown prince, who was defending himself courageously with his walking stick against two other men. Suddenly more shots were heard and the prince fell wounded. The queen, shouting for help, raised, fell back into the cushions, bleeding from many wounds.

The coachman brought his whip across the face of the monarchs, and with a bound they dashed away, disappearing into the arsenal quadrangle. The panic-stricken people, who had fled on all sides, could see the queen leaning over the crown prince and her younger son, who also was bleeding from wounds made by the assassins' bullets.

PRETENDER SEEKS THE THRONE OF PORTUGAL

Dom Miguel has been traveling for some time in Italy and is now staying at Villa Reguera. The members of his family and other relatives held a council here today, and their advisers assured the family that Dom Miguel had no chance whatever of obtaining the throne, notwithstanding the strong republican movement. The present dynasty, represented by Prince Manuel, they asserted, possesses the sympathies of the majority of the Portuguese people. Rumors have been circulating on the continent that Dom Miguel is not far from the Portuguese frontier at the present time, awaiting developments, but his relatives emphatically deny this.

Part of Sums Spent for Dom Miguel May Have Gone to Plotters

Special Dispatch to THE CALL. VIENNA, Feb. 2.—The Portuguese monarch, Duke of Braganza, who usually resides at Seebenstein, 40 miles from here, left a few days ago on a visit to his sister, the duchess of Parma, at Villa Villoria, near Padua. Miguel has been in constant communication with his sister, and it is believed that his visit to the duchess, who is enormously rich, was to raise more money to support the agitation being carried on in his behalf in Portugal.

Miguel said recently to an interviewer for a Vienna paper that he was ready to start for Lisbon at any moment and ascend the throne, as the position of the king was becoming more untenable every day.

Large sums of money have been spent in his behalf in Lisbon, but whether any of it fell into the hands of anarchists remains to be seen.

LISBON TRAGEDY STIRS GRAVE FEAR IN SPAIN

Special Dispatch to THE CALL. MADRID, Feb. 2.—The assassination of King Carlos and Crown Prince Luiz Philippe has created general sorrow in Spain, but at the same time it has awakened fears that a recurrence of anarchist deeds is not impossible in this monarchy, where the propagandists of the anarchists already has a strong foothold.

Especially in Barcelona, where the anarchists and revolutionaries are still so powerful, did the news of the assassinations cause excitement.

It is understood that for a long time there has been active communication between the radical revolutionists of Portugal and Spain, having in view simultaneous action at the psychological moment. These facts induced the government to take a firm grip on the Spanish situation today with the intention of forestalling a possible outbreak of violence.

A meeting of the council of state was held today at which it was decided to observe special precautions at the frontier, and rigid rules will be enforced concerning the message across the frontier of individuals, traffic and merchandise.

Immediately after the council of state had concluded its session Premier Maury left for Seville by special train for a consultation with King Alfonso. The foreign office gave out a statement denying that the assassins numbered six, all of them being armed with carbines and revolvers. They were paid by political agitators, enemies of the government. One of the slain regicides was a Frenchman, according to the statement, and encircling his body was a belt filled with gold, the profit of his murderous act.

Simultaneously with the assassinations, the statement also says, an armed band surrounded the home of Premier Franco in the outskirts of the city, but was beaten off by the guard.

The Liberal wince, expressing sorrow and indignation at the assassinations, makes various comments on the political aspect of the murders. The Liberal says they probably were provoked by the negligence of the Portuguese government, adding:

"We can only suppose that Premier Franco, the moral author of the horrors, if not yet dead from remorse, already has retired from public life."

The Liberal wince, adding that the Spanish military war will send troops to the Portuguese frontier in readiness for any eventuality. The impartial declares that the officers of the Madrid garrison have been ordered to remain in barracks. The paper is of the opinion that the errors of King Carlos provoked the assassinations.

HOUSEHOLD OF DUKE OF ORLEANS GRIEFSTRICKEN

Indignation Expressed by People in English Exile of Widowed Queen's Father

EVESHAM, Eng., Feb. 2.—Details of the tragedy at Lisbon were received by the household at Woodnorton, the residence of the duke of Orleans, father of the widowed queen of Portugal, with grief and horror. Neither the duke of Orleans nor his wife, the countess of Paris, is here. The news of the assassination spread quickly throughout the Evesham district and everywhere was received with profound regret. King Carlos, owing to his frequent visits to his wife's family here, was well known to the duke and his wife.

Those who share this opinion do so because of the reported strange composition of the Lisbon regicides. The reports received here say their leader is a Frenchman, while another is a Spaniard, the son of a well known Spanish anarchist.

It is thought possible that Spain may adopt some military precautions on the Portuguese frontier, and that a republican movement should develop in Portugal the tragedy will scarcely have repercussion in Spain. The Spanish government will actively watch both the Portuguese and French frontiers.

BANISHED REPUBLICAN BLAMES PREMIER FRANCO

Magalhães Lima, Masonic Grand Master, Exiled for Treason, Accuses Dictator

PARIS, Feb. 2.—So great was the shock experienced at the Portuguese legation here at the announcement of the assassination of the king and crown prince that at first dispatches from Madrid giving an official view of the events at Lisbon scarcely could be credited. Later the delegation was draped in mourning.

Franco, premier of Portugal, is held responsible for the tragedy. Premier Clemenceau and M. Pichon, French minister of foreign affairs, and President Fallieres, and representatives of foreign nations and other prominent officials, called at the legation to offer their sympathy.

President Fallieres received the news of the tragedy direct from the duke of Oporto, the king's brother, who telegraphed that two of the regicides had been killed and three arrested and that Prince Manuel would be elevated to the throne today. The French president telegraphed his condolences to the duke and also to Queen Amelie.

The death of King Carlos and Prince Luiz Philippe and the manner of their taking off caused a profound sensation in the Portuguese colony of Paris. There was general expression of grief and horror at the crime and execration of the murderers.

Senior Magalhães Lima, prominent republican and a grand master of the Portuguese Masonic fraternity, who was banished from the country for treason, today charged Premier Franco with being responsible.

"It is he," said Senhor Lima, "who formed, with cool calculation, popular discord and popular hatred."

Lima asserted that the assassination was the work of anarchists and not republicans, and added:

"I must admit that Carlos had become most unpopular because he retained Franco. Indeed, there was no more king and government, only one man invested with extraordinary power, which he used to oppress and oppress a disaster. All parties, without exception, opposed the dictatorship, but solemnly aver that the republicans are fighting for ideas and principles and can not be held responsible for this crime today. The French president telegraphed his condolences to the duke and also to Queen Amelie.

CARLOS A FATALIST WHO AWAITED DEATH

Portuguese Monarch Said to Have Declined the Aid of Foreign Detectives

SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE CALL. LONDON, Feb. 2.—When King Carlos was in London the Marquis de Soveral, the Portuguese ambassador to England, was implored to retain the services of the cleverest and most experienced of the British and French police to protect him from plots of anarchists. Several had reason to doubt the fidelity of some of the Lisbon detectives around the royal family, but the king argued conclusively that the introduction of foreign police spies into Portugal would be violently resented by his subjects. Besides, like most courageous men constantly encountering plots, Carlos had become a fatalist. He believed that nothing would give him when his appointed hour came.

That the king, queen and crown prince should run the risk of driving through Lisbon in the same carriage during the continuing intense public excitement and in the face of several attempts against their lives is deemed a savor of recklessness. In England, where no fear of assassination exists, the king and crown prince of Wales never travel by the same train for fear that both might be involved in an accident.

Prince Manuel survived, otherwise the crown would have come to the murdered king's brother, the duke of Oporto, a man of the grossest appetites, prematurely aged and stricken with locomotor ataxia, owing to his depraved life. He is a brainiac idiot, and is reported that the British Atlantic fleet, now at Vigo, has been ordered to Lisbon to watch events.

POPE CALLS WIDOW OF KING THE 'SAINT QUEEN'

Vatican and Quirinal Horror Stricken by the Royal Tragedy in Lisbon

ROME, Feb. 2.—Press and public are horrified and express indignation at the assassinations in Lisbon, although the pope has ordered the king and crown prince to be buried in the Vatican. The pope has ordered the king and crown prince to be buried in the Vatican. The pope has ordered the king and crown prince to be buried in the Vatican.

KAISER ORDERS MOURNING THREE WEEKS

Ambassadors at Berlin, Including Charlemagne Tower, Offer Their Condolences

BERLIN, Feb. 2.—News of the assassination of the king of Portugal and the crown prince was telephoned to the Kaiser's residence at Potsdam.

The Kaiser, who is in the city, has ordered the observance of strict mourning for 30 days, and has canceled all court functions for an indefinite period.

Dowager Queen Margherita, to whom the announcement of the tragedy at Lisbon was a great shock, as it recalled to her the murder of King Humbert at Monsea in 1900, sent a message to Queen Amelie saying:

"None softer than myself can understand your terrible misfortune."

The pope was distressed this morning when Cardinal Merry Del Val communicated to him the tragedy in all its details.

"Poor Amelie," said the holy father, "she may now really be called the saint queen."

After sending a telegram of condolence the pope asked the cardinal to go personally to the Portuguese embassy and express the papal sympathy.

Senior Martins d'Antas, the Portuguese ambassador and dean of the diplomats accredited to the Vatican, was ill when notified of the death of the king and crown prince. He burst into tears and sobbed only was able to murmur that the murderers were cowards.

The pope has ordered a funeral service for Carlos and prince in the Sistine chapel Thursday. Cardinal Merry Del Val will conduct the service in the presence of the sacred college, the papal court, the diplomatic corps and the aristocracy of Rome.
