

DOLLIVER EVOKES CHEERS FOR TAFT
Iowa Senator Shows Nominee Is Logical Successor of President Roosevelt
High Ideals of Morality and Political Honesty Presented as Paramount Issue

Senator Jonathan P. Dolliver of Iowa was the central figure last night in the most successful meeting which has been held by any political party in this city during the present campaign. An immense number and in aptitude to appreciate the finer points of political argument, the big throng of men and women which filled Dreamland pavilion surpassed all previous gatherings.

Senator Dolliver does not belong to any of the recognized types of campaign orators. For one thing he reached up to a higher plane of argumentation and appeal than inferior spellbinders would dare to aim at, and he had the satisfaction of finding that his auditors followed him closely and applauded more enthusiastically the greater demands he made upon their intelligence.

The claims of William H. Taft to the presidency have never been presented so impressively in this city before. Senator Dolliver has been behind the scenes of American history for years and he took occasion to unfold before his audience a sequence of unknown causes for Taft's nomination which were as interesting as they were unexpected.

McKINLEY PICKED TAFT
Dolliver told how President McKinley had picked out Taft as a logical successor in the presidency before President Roosevelt dreamed of occupying the White House; he narrated a vivid scene in the executive mansion of which he was an eye witness which changed the course of Taft's life; he told how Roosevelt, while still vice president, had prophesied in a magazine article that Taft would occupy the White House; and finally, in an impressive peroration, he listed McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft in a trinity foreordained to carry out the prophecy of William A. Seward as to the future of the great west and our intercourse with the nations of the orient.

Dolliver is a big man and he has a big man's expansive good nature and a big voice. Black haired, black mustache, portly, bearing himself easily, he stretched out his hands to the audience last night, warmed them into good nature with humorous sallies and then worked them up to a higher and higher pitch of enthusiasm with warm blooded argument. Dolliver needs no mannerisms to hold his audience, but he has one of an eccentric kind, a droll expression of face and a beating of the air with his outstretched flat when he has made a humorous point.

The singing of the "Star Spangled Banner" and "O, We United States" by Mr. Stieh, while the big audience waved flags, prefaced the speech making. Senator Perkins introduced Dolliver as the representative of Ohio in the senate, but corrected his slip when the crowd roared and laughed. There was prolonged applause when Dolliver got up.

NO HARD WORDS FOR BRYAN
"I make no pretensions as an orator or a statesman," he began. "I am a plain country politician, but I am not making any apologies on that account. I am sorry Senator Perkins brought up the vice presidential matter, but I got into it by the favor of a few friends and got out of it by unanimous consent."

"You may expect me to give the democratic party part at least of what is coming to it, but I am going to drop point you. I am not here to say hard things about anybody, especially about the democratic standard bearer. I served with him in the house of representatives and know him better than you do. There is a lad not yet 50 years old, who, without the help of money or influential connections of any kind, by the force of his own genius and character has made himself beloved by millions."

"A man told me the other day that Bryan was a God made man and Taft a man made man. I think God made both of them, but I am of the opinion that the man made man on the big one than on the little one."

"The democratic party has its uses. We must have a party to administer the government and a party to stand on and see that the job is properly done. The republican party is especially qualified to administer and the democrats to stand on guard."

"Bryan presents a pathetic figure as he has before us, hugging the democratic platform, which, he says, contains everything of importance, and all that was left out was unfit for polite conversation. But my reverence for that document has been impaired since I learned that it was dug up in an alfalfa field in Oklahoma."

POLITICAL HONESTY FIRST
"The paramount issue in our political life, the first concern of a nation like this, is national character, conscience and fidelity to the ideals that are found at the scattered firesides throughout the country; not the tariff, not banking, not currency, not war, but the political honesty that has made the seven years of Roosevelt's administration famous."

"Right after that comes the question of making a good living for us and for our children, and one reason for my affection for the republican party is that it has made the country prosperous, contented and happy; it has practical genius in preserving the market place of the United States for the people who live in the United States."

"The tariff," he declared, "but I would like to see the fellow who framed it on hand when it is taken apart. They know all about it. Do the democrats? Well, the democratic platform demands that five articles be put on the free list and three of them have been on the free list for 25 years. The tariff ought to be revised, if not by its friends, at least by its acquaintances."

TARIFF HELPS INDUSTRY
"Every industry by which California lives is dependent more or less on the attitude of the tariff statutes—lumber, wool, cattle, fruits, vegetables, grain and ore. Bryan is on record in favor of putting on the free list every industry which has made California famous; every one of them would have gone into poverty under democratic auspices. From the day the Dingley law was passed, every industry has grown by leaps and bounds to the first rank in commerce and agriculture."

"But some people say we've been too prosperous and great evils have grown Headaches and Neuralgia From Colds Laxative Bromo Quinine, the world wide Cold and Cough remedy, moves your chest, clears your nose. Look for signature, E. W. GROVE, 25c.

up. I don't deny it. In this connection Bryan says there were no trusts when the democrats were last in power. That was because there was no money in use in the country at that time.

ROOSEVELT GIVEN CREDIT
Dolliver explained the laws of consumption and of deferred consumption as the economic safety valves which save the country from the trusts by regulating prices. Then he gave Roosevelt the credit of doing the first effective work under the Sherman law and, going on, "kidded" Roosevelt, much to the amusement of the audience.

"If you find a man in office," he continued, "who has no individuality, look closely and you'll find a cotton string attached to him, and if you follow the string carefully, you'll find at the other end of the man who has the individuality."

Dolliver instanced the employers' liability law as one of the fruits of the Roosevelt administration and told how its basis rested on a decision rendered by Taft when a United States circuit judge in Ohio. This led the speaker to pay a tribute to the republican standard bearer, which was again and again interrupted by applause.

"Why did Roosevelt choose Taft as his successor?" he asked and answered: "Because he was already chosen as the logical chief executive by the course of human events."

Dolliver told how McKinley had insisted that Taft become governor general of the Philippines when Taft had decided to stay on the bench in Ohio and how Taft had risked his life by returning to the islands in obedience to the call of duty. He told of his work in Cuba and in Panama, and in conclusion he connected Taft with McKinley and Roosevelt as the three great statesmen of the new and bigger order of things in this country.

"Not least conspicuous of the three in his place in history," he ended, "will be that faithful, modest, patriotic American, William H. Taft."

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 14.—A murder and suicide occurred at 3 o'clock this morning in a rooming house at 1016 East Seventh street, as a result of which Mrs. Myrtle Clare, wife of Ira Clare, an employe of an ice company, is dead and J. J. Lambert, a conductor for the Los Angeles railway company, is at the point of death in the receiving hospital. The police believe that the woman shot the man and then shot herself, although the evidence as to which one did the shooting is not conclusive.

The couple went to the rooming house shortly before 3 o'clock this morning, and a few minutes later a shot was heard in the room. A few seconds later a second shot was heard and a scream, which aroused other roomers in the house and brought them to the room. The body of the woman was lying on the floor partially unpressed. She had received a pistol bullet through the left breast and was dying. She expired a few minutes later. Lambert was lying on the floor with a bullet hole in his head. The revolver with which the shooting had been done was between the two on the floor. Lambert had removed all of his clothing, evidently preparatory to retiring.

Both the man and woman were married. Mrs. Clare left her husband when she met Lambert some months ago, and had applied for a divorce after it is stated by the police that Mrs. Clare did not know at that time that Lambert was married. The latter's wife is a clerk at the Clarendon hotel.

When Mrs. Clare learned that Lambert had deceived her and already had a wife living she resolved to end both of their lives. Mrs. Clare, it is said, was shortly to have become a mother. She was about 22 years of age. Lambert came here some time ago from Denver and Pueblo.

NEGRO BEATEN BY RACETRACK CROWD
His Companion Stabbed White Man, but Made His Escape

SALT LAKE, Utah, Oct. 14.—Because he had been in the company of one of his own race who murderously assaulted a white woman, Oliver McManus, a negro, was pursued, dragged from a street and beaten by a crowd of racetrack spectators late this afternoon. McManus was one of a party of four colored men. After the races a member of the quartet quarreled with a white man known as "Slim" over a bet and ended the dispute by stabbing "Slim" in the neck with a dirk. When the assault became known the crowd in the betting ring chased the four negroes through the fair grounds to the gates. There "Slim's" assailant drew a revolver and fired toward the mob. In the recoil which followed he and two of his companions got away. McManus was not so fortunate. The crowd kept him in sight and maintained an exciting pursuit through streets, alleys, yards and residences. McManus at last boarded a moving streetcar and the leaders of the mob stopped the car to drag him from it.

Shouting for a rope and failing to get it the crowd vented its fury by kicking and beating the helpless and innocent colored man almost into insensibility. He was rescued by the fair grounds police and taken to the police station, where his wounds were dressed. "Slim" could not be found tonight, but it is thought his wound will not prove serious. The negro who did the stabbing is likewise missing.

SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE CALL
NAPA, Oct. 14.—Strong testimony for the prosecution was brought out today in the trial of L. H. Lund and J. L. Shroyer, charged jointly with the murder of John Woodapple, near this city last February.

Mrs. Babcock, Shroyer's daughter, testified that she overheard a conversation between her father and Lund who was an employe of Shroyer, in which the plot to kill Woodapple was hatched. The day after the conversation between Lund and her father, Mrs. Babcock stated, she followed them to Woodapple's cabin, where she saw her father engage the old man in conversation.

While Shroyer and Woodapple were talking outside of the cabin, Lund picked up a neck yoke and struck the old man over the head with it, falling him to the ground. They then picked up the body and carried it into the house and set the house on fire.

Robert Coombs testified that he went to Woodapple's cabin near Monticello in February of this year to see Woodapple in regard to some wood chipping. He said that when he reached Woodapple's place he found the cabin burned to the ground. In searching among the ruins he discovered in the ashes some of the old man's bones that had not been consumed. He also found the bones of the old man's dog. From the Woodapple place Coombs then went to Shroyer's home and asked Shroyer when he had last seen Woodapple alive.

Shroyer, according to the testimony of Coombs, answered that he knew nothing about the fire. Coombs stopped with Shroyer all of that night and the next day notified the coroner.
