

CALHOUN CASE LAGS WITH SIX STILL IN BOX

Process of Elimination Continues Without a Single Step Forward

Two Talesmen Held Over From Monday Disqualify Themselves

The process of elimination continued as the only real, active element in the Calhoun trial yesterday. There was not a single step forward toward the completion of the impanelment of the half formed jury and the only prospects in sight when the case was convened yesterday morning failed to materialize into real jurors.

Two talesmen were held over from Monday for further examination yesterday morning, but though the previous inquiries had held out some hope that they might be temporarily passed this was very quickly dissipated. Abraham S. Feder, the real estate man who is a member of the firm handling the Calhoun case, was the first to go. He opened the door for his own dismissal by making a statement to the effect that the morning papers had declared he was trying to get on the jury and adding that this was the very opposite of his real intentions.

"As a matter of fact, I am trying to get off the jury," said Feder, "but at the same time I'm telling the truth. I wouldn't lie to get on the jury and I wouldn't lie to get off, but I don't want off. I haven't been asked whether or not I thought myself that I was qualified to serve."

Judge Lawlor announced that the court had not understood the talesman's attitude and Earl Rogers of the defense called attention to the fact that the challenge interposed by the prosecution Monday afternoon had not been formally protested.

HENEY CALLS TURN

"Well, why did you allow us to waste the time of the court then?" demanded Henev.

Judge Lawlor said that he had also understood that a denial was interposed to the challenge and that he had assumed the formal statement to have been inadvertently omitted. He brought the matter to an end without any further useless expenditure of time by promptly allowing the challenge.

Andrew Foreman disqualified himself almost as quickly as Feder, though the efforts of the defense to shake his declarations of fairness had proved futile Monday. Foreman said he had never paid any attention to the newspaper accounts of municipal hoodluming because he had heard of supervisors being bribed at least 40 years ago and thought it had continued ever since.

Moreover, he said he didn't care whether they were bribed or not.

"I have to pay my taxes just the same and I don't care who gets the money," he said.

Henev turned to Rogers and stated that in view of the juror's declaration the prosecution would not contest any challenge that was interposed.

Rogers submitted the challenge and it was allowed.

HENEY AND MOORE CLASH

There was a slight clash between Henev and A. A. Moore during the afternoon session, while the examination of Frank H. Gardner, a real estate dealer, was in progress. Gardner said he was opposed to the granting of immunity to the supervisors and explained to Henev that he thought it had been given after they had confessed. While Henev was sounding him on this subject, Stanley Moore, at a whispered suggestion from his father, put in a couple of questions amounting practically to statements that immunity had been first offered to the supervisors through James L. Gallagher, and also to Ruef and Schmitz, by Rudolph Spreckels in person.

Objections were made to the questions on the ground that through them the defense was seeking to exploit an issue of the case having no bearing on the state of mind of the juror. Moore retorted that the defense was willing to exploit the matter, and Henev responded just as hotly that the opportunity would be afforded when the case was actually brought to trial with 12 jurors in the box. He added that the prosecution had no desire to prolong the service of the six men already sworn by taking up outside questions until the time came when they should become material.

More than a score of talesmen were examined during the day and all were excused. A new special venire of 60 has been ordered for today.

WIDOW IS REQUIRING ACCOUNTING OF ESTATE

Bench Warrant Issued for Arrest of George B. Scott

A bench warrant was issued by Judge Graham yesterday for the arrest of George B. Scott, who refused to obey a citation ordering him to attend court and explain his management of the estate of his deceased brother, Stanley M. Scott. The widow of Stanley Scott states that George has refused to give her any account of the debts or assets of the hardware business at 610 Valencia street, forming part of the estate of her husband. George Scott claims to have an interest in the store. In issuing a bench warrant for Scott's arrest Judge Graham fixed bail at $25.

PATRIOT'S NEPHEW LAUNCHES PROJECT

Scheme Suggested for Colonizing Lands in State With Poor Italian Immigrants

Former Labor Commissioner in Panama Presents Idea to Promotion Committee

A far reaching scheme for establishing agricultural colonies of Italian immigrants in the state of California has been launched by Giuseppe Garibaldi, a nephew of the famous patriot of the same name. Garibaldi is at present in San Francisco and was the guest yesterday of the California Promotion committee. His project has not gone beyond the preliminary stage, but he hopes within the next few weeks to be able to make sufficient headway to insure its success.

Garibaldi will move on the theory that it is better to help the immigrant to help himself than to allow him to risk of failure. The plans of the young Italian do not call for a big commercial enterprise with large profits, but rather for a vast cooperative undertaking with adequate remuneration for those who lend their financial support.

SERVED TWO GOVERNMENTS.

It was by chance that Garibaldi's mind was turned toward the venture. He had been sent to Panama as special commissioner of the Italian government to investigate labor conditions. At the end of three months, he completed his mission, but was prevailed upon by Colonel Goethals to remain as labor commissioner for the canal authorities. He spent two years there and left recently, intending to go to China to join his brother, who is in charge of important railroad construction there. He came to San Francisco on his way to the orient, but was charmed with the state and the people, and thought this an ideal place for thrifty Italian immigrants.

Garibaldi is a young man of handsome features and athletic figure. By profession he is a civil engineer, but has had a wide experience in colonization matters in Australia and Argentina by Colonel Goethals for the canal authorities. He spent two years there and left recently, intending to go to China to join his brother, who is in charge of important railroad construction there. He came to San Francisco on his way to the orient, but was charmed with the state and the people, and thought this an ideal place for thrifty Italian immigrants.

FINANCIAL AID NEEDED.

"I am surprised," he said, "that the state has never taken up the question of colonization in a systematic manner. From what I can see, the need of this state is a larger agricultural community. I believe this would be of great benefit to California. Every land is dependent upon its agricultural development, and in California there is much room for new farming communities.

PLAN FOR POOR FAMILIES.

"My idea would be to have a company provide the land, the houses, the necessary implements and seed to the settlers. I would try to arrange it so that we could bring families who were without funds. After they had been provided with everything necessary they could be assisted in their farming by a council which could do this morning by the way, get the limit. In case I find people willing to assist financially I shall go ahead, but if there is no desire to do so, of course I shall have to let it drop.

LOCATION NOT DECIDED

"First of all, it would be necessary to secure an advantageous location, so that the question of transportation would present no difficulties. I will take the matter up with some of your people in a short time, and if they favor the plan we will carry it out."

Garibaldi said that he had no special locality in mind, as he had not yet been able to look into the land situation. He will confer during the week with a number of leading financiers.

MAN, HIS OWN ATTORNEY, MAKES JUDGE ANGRY

Lathan McNulty Presents Card That Does Not Please

Lathan McNulty, whose occupation is unknown, defended himself before Police Judge Conlan yesterday on a charge of petty larceny for stealing a bottle of whisky from Patrick Murnane, 1127 Mission street. McNulty was so indignant that he aroused the judge's indignation and when he appears for sentence this morning he will get the limit.

McNulty declared that he was not a thief, a vagrant or a drunkard, that his crops would also be credited to them, and in a few years they would own their land. As fast as one colony had been placed on its feet another could be established.

"To show you that I am not a vagrant," said McNulty, "here is the card of the firm for whom I work." He held up to the judge a card on which the name of a drug company was printed. The judge deftly took the card out of McNulty's fingers and read on the other side. "Take that bull outside."

"So that's what you are giving me," said the judge indignantly. "You will be taken somewhere tomorrow for as long a time as the law allows." McNulty collapsed.

BENSON FILES APPEAL IN THE FEDERAL COURT

Claims Offense Was Against State, Not Nation

John A. Benson, convicted with Dr. E. B. Perrin of land fraud and sentenced to one year imprisonment, filed an appeal yesterday in the United States circuit court of appeal. As Dr. Perrin had already filed an appeal in his case, Benson set forth in his petition that one defendant could not be granted an appeal without the other being allowed the same privilege. He also set forth that the evidence was insufficient to charge an offense against the United States government. He claimed that if there had been an offense committed it had been against the state of California and not the federal government.

PROGRESS MADE IN NEWBURGH TRIAL

Seven Men Sworn to Serve on Jury in Case Against Attorney

Judge Conley Announces That When Secured Twelve Will Be Locked Up

Substantial progress was made yesterday in the task of securing a jury to try Adolph S. Newburgh, the lawyer charged with attempting to bribe a talesman to vote for the acquittal of Abe Ruef. When court adjourned seven had been sworn for duty and one passed for cause. The first opportunity to exercise peremptory challenges occurred at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The prosecution used two and the defense three. Following are the names of the seven sworn jurors:

Charles P. Newman, 2584 San Bruno avenue.
Frank L. Guntz, 426 Oak street.
Michael Deasy, 370 Sansome street.
Thomas O'Connor, 1157 Polson street.
William Diehl, 442A Frederick street.
John A. Wilson, 1121 Tennessee street.
Julius Kiemer, 2226 Webster street.

Besides the foregoing, Edward B. Ward, 428 Polson street, has been temporarily passed. Among those peremptorily challenged by the prosecution was A. L. Lux, who went to school with Ruef and is a friend of Schmitz.

Judge Conley announced that as soon as the jury is completed he will order it locked up. He said he would do this as much for the sake of the jurors themselves as anything else, being desirous to protect them against animadversions that might be passed by reason of any verdict they might render. The judge added that he had absolute confidence in the integrity of the seven men who had been sworn.

"BILLY" HYNES BUTT OF BIRD STORE ESTATE JOKE

Wits Harass Him With Notes, Phone Calls and Seeds

"Dear Sir: I have always wanted a canary, and as I see by the paper that Mr. Williams, the birdman, has died and has no one to leave his birds to, would you ask that you give me one of those little yellow canaries. I would be very kind to do so. Yours truly," "The above is a sample of the numerous letters that poured into the office of M. J. Hynes, public administrator, all day yesterday. And that wasn't all. Hynes visited the Elks club Monday night and while there enjoying himself he received no less than 100 telephone messages, asking that certain birds be given to certain friends.

"This has been the most troublesome estate I have had since I have been public administrator," said Hynes yesterday. "The people seem to think that these birds have been left to me and that I have the entire disposition of them."

"The telephone messages," well, they are a joke, but I think that it is carrying it too far when they send by a messenger boy several packages of bird seed and about two pounds of cuttle fish for the birds. Poor, little things."

The Tailored Girl and the Fashion Number

THIS is the tale of the tailor-made girl. She lives in San Francisco. Maybe you know her. You certainly have seen her—unless you are blind. She is worth seeing—worth staring at and after, even to the point of rudeness. There is no more wholesome sight in all California, and none other that is better medicine for jaded eyes.

All because she is the epitome of the art of the woman's tailor. Her style, her chic, is not accidental. She is designed and shaped on accurate lines, even though the designer's art reaches the acme of all art and conceals itself. And she changes her lines at the behest of fashion's voice.

The tailored girl of the Spring of 1909 is not like the tailored girl of last Spring. Not in the least—not for a minute. She is a constant joy because she never allows you to grow used to her. She knows the perennial charm of change. The question is: What does she change to in the merry Spring of 1909?

The full and fascinating answer to this very important query will be contained in the great fashion number of The Call which appears on March 28—that's next Sunday. But perhaps you'd like a little advance "info"—a tip. Listen:

The new tailor makes are "three piece suits." Waist and skirt are united in empire or princess effect, but the parts count double just the same. Add the coat and there you are—three piece suits.

However, two piece suits will be seen also. In these the skirts have a raised waist line. The separate waist must match the skirt in color or harmonize with it so closely that the effect of a single costume is there—all there.

And the materials? Lightweight worsteds, fancy diagonal weaves, mannish mixtures, broadcloths of light and supple texture, smooth chevots, satin prunellas, French serges. She may take her choice and still be exactly right.

And the colors? Gray, or ashes of roses, or wood brown, or morocco. Or she may get away from any of those and have a white striped with black—the lighter weaves of tailored suitings come that way.

And the details of the patterns? Well—the whole story can't be told here. It can't begin to be told here. It takes pages and pages to tell it all, and to picture the best things in tailor makes.

That's why there is to be a big fashion number. It will tell all about the tailored girl—and there are other girls just as interesting. It tells all about them, too—the big fashion number of The Call, which appears next Sunday, March 28.
