THE picture puzzle contest is a splendid success. The long list of names here published proves this fact beyond any doubt. These are the names of the clever boys and girls who sent in absolutely correct answers to the six puzzle pictures which appeared in The Junior Call last Saturday. The Junior is very proud of the cleverness shown by its young readers. A large number of answers received contained one or more errors. The correct answers are given here, so that those who made mistakes can see just where they missed. They are urged to try again this week.

Six watches are awarded to six fortunate boys and girls, and all the others who sent in correct answers will find their names on the Roll of Honor, which is next thing to winning a watch. If you did not get a watch this time, try again. Those who persevere are sure to win. The beautiful prizes sooner or later. The Junior Call only wishes it could award one of the fine watches to every boy and girl who sent a correct answer, but that is impossible. However, there are plenty of weeks ahead and plenty of watches. Just keep on until you get yours.

Six new puzzle pictures are shown at the top of this page. Each is numbered. Send in your answers by numbers. No. 1 is so and so. No. 2 is so and so. The puzzles are not very difficult, just a test of your cleverness. Send in answers just as soon as possible. All answers must be in by next Wednesday evening, but the sooner the better.

This contest is for Juniors from 10 to 16 years of age. The prizes for Juniors will find their contest on the fourth page.

The correct answers to the puzzle presented in last Saturday's Junior Call are as follows: 1—Diana, 2—weasel, 3—cocoanut, 4—Speaker Cannon, 5—towel, 6—spurker.

How Zip, the Cur, Became a Hero and Saved His Little Mistress

HAZEL BRIGHT,
Lodi, Cal., Age 13 Years

R. and Mrs. Benton Hale and daughter Muriel, that was the way it read, on the ship's register. But there was one of the family left out. There he is now playing with Muriel on the deck. It is Zip, the yellow dog of unknown pedigree. It was very queer how Zip became a permanent member of the family.

The Hales always went to their home, Seattle, every summer. This particular summer they had been in their summer home a few weeks when a stray dog came around one day. Muriel fed him and petted him and the two soon became fast friends.

After two months of enjoyment Mrs. Hale said to her daughter that they would go back to town on Sunday so that Muriel could go to school. Mrs. Hale said nothing about Zip, as they would take him with her.

The next day was Saturday and she and Zip set out to visit their favorite haunts. They went first to see the fisherman who liked to tell such delightful stories about his life on the water.

Then they went to the little beach around the big rock, where Muriel took her shoes and stockings off and she and Zip went in wading. And finally they went to Muriel's favorite retreat. It was a cave in a sand bank. Her father had fixed her a fine playhouse there and she had a lovely place for her dolls. While she and Zip were talking a last look around a noise was heard and a lot of sand came into the cave. There more and more until it was quite dark.

"Oh, Zip! whatever shall we do?" cried Muriel, for she knew that it was a sand slide, as she had been told about such things happening and warned not to touch any of the rocks of the sand above, for fear she might cause it to fall.

"Bow-wow-wow!" answered Zip.

"Oh! you dear doggie, whatever could you do?" Zip, if we do not get home soon mamma and papa will be worried about us, because I said I would not stay late. Zip, couldn't you go home and tell them where we are?" said Muriel.

"Bow-wow!" answered Zip, which evidently means "yes" in the dog language, for he was a knowing little dog, even if he was a cur, and understood nearly every word Muriel had said to him.

Half an hour later a little black nose poked out of the pile of sand and after it came a yellow body, which belonged to no other than Zip. He shook the sand off and started for home.

There panic prevailed, for Muriel had never been out so late before. Mrs. Hale went to her room and would see no one except her husband. He and some other men were out with lanterns, searching for the lost child.

Mrs. Hale was lying on a couch in her room when she heard carriage wheels on the drive. Ah, if they had only found Muriel! There was a camp of gipsies not far from the town, and this only added to Mrs. Hale's discomfort. Mr. Hale came into his wife's room, looking pale and haggard. "Oh, Benton," she gasped, "is she dead?"

"I do not know, Alice," answered her husband. "We have found no trace of her."

Just then a scratching was heard at the door. Mr. Hale opened it and Zip came bounding in. First he ran to Mr. Hale and then to the lady, barking.

"Zip," said Mr. Hale, "can you tell us where Muriel is?"

"Bow-wow-wow," Zip answered, knowingly running to the door.

Mr. Hale followed him, telling his wife not to worry.

He followed Zip along the road until they came to the cave. Here Zip stopped.

"My God!" exclaimed Mr. Hale. "Is she in there, Zip? How fortunate that I built that chimney for her playhouse so she can get some air." He went to the top of it and called her name. She answered, "Yes, papa."

He told her he would get her out soon. Then he hurried back and got some men to come and shovel the sand away. They soon had it cleared away, and Muriel jumped into her father's arms. Muriel ran to Zip and told her father how he had gone home for her.

Mr. Hale said: "I did think, Muriel, that we would have to leave Zip here, but after this, never!"

So Zip got a lovely new collar with his name on it, and was dearer to the family than ever.

The Princess Who Wanted a Brother

MARJORIE MAUZY
1165 O'Farrell Street, San Francisco.
Sixth Grade, Pacific Heights School, Age 13 Years

It was nearly bedtime and little Marion whispered, as she climbed on her mother's knee, "Please tell me a story, mamma."

"What shall I tell you about, love?" said mamma, fondly kissing the dimpled cheeks.

"Oh, my favorite story," answered Marion, cuddling down in the loving arms.

"Once upon a time," began mamma, rocking to and fro, "there lived in a beautiful palace a little girl with golden curls, like yours. Her name was Olive and she was the king's daughter. Olive could have anything in the world she wanted, but she was very unhappy. She wasn't allowed to go out alone, couldn't wade in the brook or make mud pies and, most of all, didn't have a brother or playfellow."

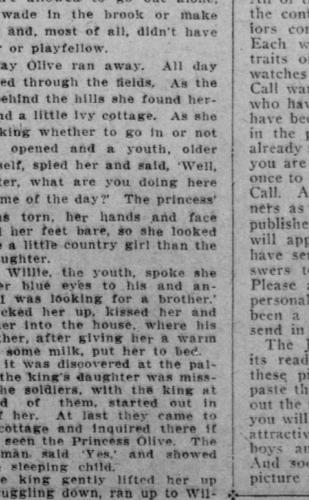

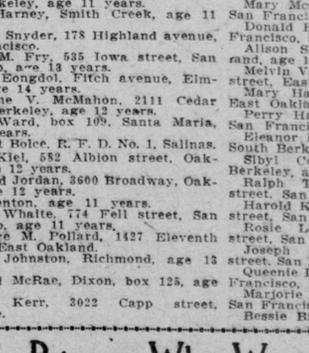

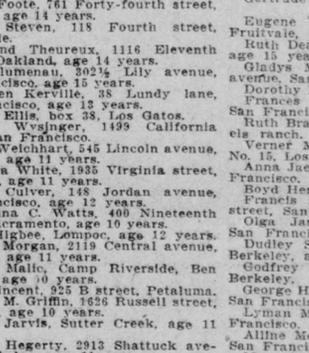

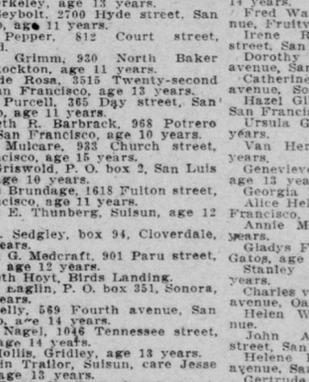

"One day Olive ran away. All day she walked through the fields. As the sun set behind the hills she found herself behind a little ivy cottage. As she was thinking whether to go in or not the door opened and a youth, older than herself, spied her and said, 'Well, little sister, what are you doing here at this time of the day?' The princess' dress was torn, her hands and face dirty and her feet bare, so she looked more like a little country girl than the king's daughter."

"When Willie, the youth, spoke she raised her blue eyes to his and answered, 'I was looking for a brother.' Willie picked her up, kissed her and carried her into the house, where his good mother, after giving her a warm bath and some milk, put her to bed."

"When it was discovered at the palace that the king's daughter was missing all the soldiers, with the king at the head of them, started out in search of her. At last they came to the ivy cottage and inquired there if they had seen the Princess Olive. The good woman said 'Yes' and showed them the sleeping child."

"As the king gently lifted her up Olive, struggling down, ran up to Wil-

On this page you see the portraits of five boys and five girls. All of them have won prizes in the contests for the older Juniors conducted on this page. Each week a number of portraits of those who have won watches will appear. The Junior Call wants pictures of all those who have won watches. If you have been a winner at any time in the past, and you have not already sent in your photograph, you are requested to send it at once to the editor of The Junior Call. As many pictures of winners as can be secured will be published on this page. Some will appear each week. Many have sent their pictures in answers to letters, but not all. Please accept this notice as a personal request, if you have been a winner at any time, to send in your picture.

The Junior Call suggests to its readers that they cut out these pictures of winners and paste them in a scrapbook. Cut out the new ones each week and you will have an interesting and attractive album of the bright boys and girls of California. And sooner or later your own picture will be among them!

Are you fond of writing stories? The Junior Call is always glad to receive stories on any interesting subject from its boys and girls. If you have a story in mind, or would like to see what you can do in the story line, get to work with your pen or pencil. Send your story to the editor of The Junior Call. All stories received which are good enough to print will be given space in The Junior and the name and address of the author will appear at the head of each. These stories should be not more than 500 words in length.

HAZEL BRIGHT,
Lodi, Cal., Age 13 Years

R. and Mrs. Benton Hale and daughter Muriel, that was the way it read, on the ship's register. But there was one of the family left out. There he is now playing with Muriel on the deck. It is Zip, the yellow dog of unknown pedigree. It was very queer how Zip became a permanent member of the family.

The Hales always went to their home, Seattle, every summer. This particular summer they had been in their summer home a few weeks when a stray dog came around one day. Muriel fed him and petted him and the two soon became fast friends.

After two months of enjoyment Mrs. Hale said to her daughter that they would go back to town on Sunday so that Muriel could go to school. Mrs. Hale said nothing about Zip, as they would take him with her.

The next day was Saturday and she and Zip set out to visit their favorite haunts. They went first to see the fisherman who liked to tell such delightful stories about his life on the water.

Then they went to the little beach around the big rock, where Muriel took her shoes and stockings off and she and Zip went in wading. And finally they went to Muriel's favorite retreat. It was a cave in a sand bank. Her father had fixed her a fine playhouse there and she had a lovely place for her dolls. While she and Zip were talking a last look around a noise was heard and a lot of sand came into the cave. There more and more until it was quite dark.

"Oh, Zip! whatever shall we do?" cried Muriel, for she knew that it was a sand slide, as she had been told about such things happening and warned not to touch any of the rocks of the sand above, for fear she might cause it to fall.

"Bow-wow-wow!" answered Zip.

"Oh! you dear doggie, whatever could you do?" Zip, if we do not get home soon mamma and papa will be worried about us, because I said I would not stay late. Zip, couldn't you go home and tell them where we are?" said Muriel.

"Bow-wow!" answered Zip, which evidently means "yes" in the dog language, for he was a knowing little dog, even if he was a cur, and understood nearly every word Muriel had said to him.

Half an hour later a little black nose poked out of the pile of sand and after it came a yellow body, which belonged to no other than Zip. He shook the sand off and started for home.

There panic prevailed, for Muriel had never been out so late before. Mrs. Hale went to her room and would see no one except her husband. He and some other men were out with lanterns, searching for the lost child.

Mrs. Hale was lying on a couch in her room when she heard carriage wheels on the drive. Ah, if they had only found Muriel! There was a camp of gipsies not far from the town, and this only added to Mrs. Hale's discomfort. Mr. Hale came into his wife's room, looking pale and haggard. "Oh, Benton," she gasped, "is she dead?"

"I do not know, Alice," answered her husband. "We have found no trace of her."

Just then a scratching was heard at the door. Mr. Hale opened it and Zip came bounding in. First he ran to Mr. Hale and then to the lady, barking.

"Zip," said Mr. Hale, "can you tell us where Muriel is?"

"Bow-wow-wow," Zip answered, knowingly running to the door.

Mr. Hale followed him, telling his wife not to worry.

He followed Zip along the road until they came to the cave. Here Zip stopped.

"My God!" exclaimed Mr. Hale. "Is she in there, Zip? How fortunate that I built that chimney for her playhouse so she can get some air." He went to the top of it and called her name. She answered, "Yes, papa."

He told her he would get her out soon. Then he hurried back and got some men to come and shovel the sand away. They soon had it cleared away, and Muriel jumped into her father's arms. Muriel ran to Zip and told her father how he had gone home for her.

Mr. Hale said: "I did think, Muriel, that we would have to leave Zip here, but after this, never!"

So Zip got a lovely new collar with his name on it, and was dearer to the family than ever.

The Fountain

Into the sunshine,
Full of the light,
Leaping and flashing
From morn till night!

Into the moonlight,
Whiter than snow,
Waving so flowerlike
When the winds blow!

Into the starlight,
Rushing in spray,
Happy at midnight,
Happy by day.

Ever in motion,
Blithesome and cheery,
Still climbing heavenward,
Never weary.

Glad of all weathers,
Still seeming best,
Upward or downward
Motion they rest.

Full of nature
Nothing can tame,
Changes every moment,
Ever the same.

Ceaseless aspiring,
Ceaseless content,
Darkness or sunshine
Thy element.

Glorious fountain!
Let my heart be
Fresh, changeful, constant,
Upward like thee!
