

FOR THE YOUNGER JUNIORS

THE WINNERS OF PAINT BOX PRIZES

HAPPY younger juniors! Today you have the picture of the boy playing ball, and of all the junior sports that is surely the most popular. Most little boys would rather play ball than eat their breakfast any day, so next week The Junior Call expects to receive a great many beautifully colored pictures from which to select the prize winners. Begin right away to paint as nice a picture as you possibly can, and, when finished, write on it plainly your name and address in full, giving street and number and post-office address. If you live in San Francisco, put that on your picture, for the editor has no means of knowing unless you tell him, and no picture can be awarded a prize that is not plainly marked with the name and address of the artist. Twenty paint boxes will be awarded to twenty pictures most artistically and neatly colored. This contest is for the younger juniors only, those who are 10 years of age and younger. The older juniors will find their contests in the other departments. The children who are awarded prizes for painting the picture of autumn leaves are:

- ALBERT EDWARD ELLISON, 5213 East Fourteenth, Melrose.

THE FISHERMAN'S SON

GEORGINA SCHLUETER

28 Laidlaw Street, San Francisco.
Age 13 Years

ONCE upon a time there lived a poor fisherman and his son, Donald. This son was very lazy and would not work, depending entirely upon his father. Before long, however, the fisherman died and Donald was forced to seek work and earn his own living.

For a long time the youth traveled on, not knowing where to go. At length he reached the forest and was about to lie down under the shady branches of one of the trees, when suddenly he heard his name called in a faint, weak voice.

Donald turned around quickly, and what was his surprise to see a little dwarf of about three feet high standing by one of the trees near by. The dwarf was dressed in a black suit and hat, but his beard, which was almost as long as himself, was caught in the branches of the tree, and, try all he could, the dwarf could not free his beard. Donald came to his aid and before long the beard was free.

The little dwarf was very grateful to Donald, and for the kindness that he had done he gave the youth a small magic sword and said: "Donald, I wish you to take good care of this sword, as some day you may need it, for when you are in trouble just strike three times upon the ground with it and I will come to your aid." With that he disappeared. Donald put the sword into his pocket and continued his way.

At length he arrived at a beautiful castle that glittered in the sun. Donald had no idea what castle this was and he was about to inquire when he heard a window open, and, looking up, he perceived a beautiful woman standing by one of the windows. The lady called him and said: "Poor boy, have you come to rescue me? You will not succeed, for in this castle lives a mighty giant called Cambray, who feeds on the flesh of human beings. He is coming soon, so pray go away from here or you will surely die." Hardly had she spoken, however, when the earth began to tremble and Donald heard screams and howls. Immediately the lady shut the window crying, "The giant is coming; the giant is here!" But Donald did not flee.

Soon the giant appeared in view and when he saw Donald he rushed at him with a scowl of rage. Instantly Donald drew forth his sword and with it struck the ground three times. Instead of the dwarf there rose from the earth a beautiful fairy, whom Donald knew to be Venus. She advanced toward the giant, waving her arms as she went. As Donald looked, spellbound, the giant dropped his arms and sank slowly into a deep slumber. Venus had lulled him to sleep. Donald then cut off the giant's head and went into the castle.

He told the lady that she was free to go where she pleased, but she said that she would rather stay there. So Donald married her and both lived happily ever after. They kept the magic sword, but never had they any use for it again.

A Little Hero

Holland is a flat country, and walls, called dykes, surround it to keep out the water. A break in the dyke would cause death to the poor country peasants.

It was an autumn afternoon and little Peter was sent by his mother to a poor blind man who lived beyond the dyke, and on his way home he noticed the angry waves caused by autumn storms dashing against the dykes. He heard a strange sound. "What is that?" he said to himself. He listened again and heard a dripping of water. He looked at the side of the dyke and discovered a small hole with water running through.

It was the beginning of a break and hundreds of lives were in danger. There was no one for Peter to call, so he thrust his arm into the hole and stopped the flow of water. Night was already on and he was tired, hungry and lonesome. He tried to whistle, but could not. He thought he could not stand it any longer, but then he thought of all the lives and waited.

Early dawn was coming and he saw the pastor walking along the dyke. The pastor heard his moaning and came to his aid. He called some other men and they filled the hole. Peter was carried home by the grateful men to his mother, who was watching in anxiety and fear for her son. She heard the shouts and ran with the others and found him with the pastor, who said: "Your son has saved our land and lives."

This is the picture to be colored. Paint it in water colors or crayon and send immediately to the Editor of the Junior Call
