

IN WOMAN'S WORLD

The Smart Set

WHEN Porter Garnett waited for quiet and in the classic cadence of blank verse prayed his brother Bohemians to do his will and not applaud, every one felt that he forewore an honor for the sake of art. The appeal was heeded, and no sound of clapping hands or gallery whistles broke across the mysticism of "The Green Knight" in the Bohemian grove.

When an occasional insurrectionist showed signs of applause, Harry Francis rose to suppress him. A Bravo that broke from one drew fusillades of syllabart Hushes, and every one conceded that silence had lent enchantment to the night.

But, for all that, the brother Bohemians had wanted to applaud in their materialistic way, and they are going to the concert tomorrow to pound the floor to pieces if they want to. Author and composer have removed the ban, and when the music thrills them to a bravo they can say so, or when some rhythmic phrase of esoteric beauty baffles understanding, but appeals to latent poetry in the soul, may thunder their applause.

A strange thing about it is that bankers, brokers, stock, bond and insurance, as well as musicians, rave about the music. Since the madrigals, they say, it is the most beautiful score of Bohemian composition, with a piquant strain of originality that promises greater things for a young composer.

When the hard headed business man type is stirred with the artistic temperament to a common enthusiasm, there is reason for the miracle.

So, while Bohemians are going for the chance to applaud, others have the symbolism explained by Marshall Darrach and screen pictures, and still others for the annual adventure into midsummer mysteries of the club, the rest of the world may go for all these things and to know what spell the music weaves.

"A Little at a Time and Oftener" ---By Ruth Cameron

"It reminded me," said the lady-who-always-knows-somehow, "of something a maid I had when I was first married said to me."

The lady-who-always-knows-somehow had been in to call on a neighbor of ours who had just come back from a long visit. She had been telling us how enthusiastic this woman's daughter was at her return, and how she could not seem to do enough for her mother. This was a new character for the daughter. She has the reputation of being a decidedly selfish girl who lets her mother wait on her by inches and rewards her with rudeness and impatience.

We expressed our interest as to what the girl's spasm of exuberant appreciation reminded the lady-who-always-knows-somehow of, and the lady went on:

"It was one time when I was house cleaning. I wanted to get everything clean together for once, and I'd been working hard enough to kill myself and I just gave out and had to go to bed. I had a jolly little Irish girl, just over for a maid, and when she brought me up my tea that night she said, 'Sure, darlint, I think ye'll have to be after doing your cleaning more like the robins feed their young.'

"And how is that?" I said.

"A little at a time and oftener," she explained.

"How many things that would simplify besides house cleaning?"

How often we try to pay debts of kindness or gratitude in a lump—at Christmas time, perhaps—when the payment could so much better be made "as the robins feed their young."

How often we try to acquire accomplishments or qualities of character by a spasm of intense and prolonged effort, whereas the only real way to acquire most things worth acquiring is by efforts made "as the robins feed their young."

The world outdoors has many lessons for us. Animal and vegetable life have many wise words to say to us of serenity, of patience and self-control, if we will but listen.

But few, I think, are wiser than the robin's lesson as translated by the little Irish girl.

Grant us in this impatient life to still remember that there are many, many things which can best be done "as the robins feed their young, a little at a time and oftener."

Women Demand Suffrage in Order to Mold the Future

Not Merely as a Right, but as a Means to an End, Is the Ballot Needed

By GAIL LAUGHLIN

The women of California are demanding suffrage as a right, but they are not demanding it merely as a right. They are demanding it as a means to an end, as a tool by means of which women may have a share in molding the future generations of mankind.

The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world. Yes, while the world remains in the cradle, but that is not for long. At a very early age the child not only leaves the cradle but goes out from the home itself. He spends a large proportion of his waking hours in school, and in the mold of character the influence of the school is not infrequently greater than even the influence of the home itself.

On his way to and from school he comes in touch with the conditions which obtain outside the home, and which, in their turn, have a powerful influence in the shaping of character.

But the conditions which determine the nature of the school influence and the character of the surrounding world which the child is brought in contact on his way to and from school are, in the last analysis, determined by the voters who elect school boards and who control through their votes those who enact laws and those who are charged with the enforcement of law. They are not determined by voteless mothers who are sitting at home rocking an empty cradle.

If a mother is to look after the welfare of even her own children, not to mention the welfare of other children, she must do something besides rock a cradle. She must mold conditions outside the home as well as in it. It is only the mother whose interest in her children ends at the front door who is content to let her power over the conditions which affect her children end at the front door, too.

Beneath an improvised altar of hydrangeas and tiger lilies in the drawing room of Dr. Henry Gibbons' home in Twentieth avenue, Miss Florence Gibbons, the second daughter of the house, and Perry Evans were married at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The bride, in a robe of ivory satin trimmed with rich old lace, was given into the keeping of the bridegroom by her father. A semi wreath of orange blossoms held her veil in place, and she carried a shower of lilies of the valley enmeshed in willow tulle.

Miss Miriam Gibbons, who attended her sister as maid of honor, was gowned in a rich rose silk with an overdress of pale blue chiffon. A sheaf of roses, intertwined with maidenhair and illusion in shades of pink and blue gave the necessary touch of distinction to the costume. Charles Craig officiated as best man. Rev. Bradford Leavitt read the service according to the rites of the Episcopal church. Only the two families and a very few of the most intimate friends of the couple witnessed the ceremony and remained for the informal reception that followed, and the house was simply and beautifully decorated with tiger lilies, hydrangeas and asters in a color scheme of pink and blue. The same flowers predominated in the dining hall, where a supper was served. Mr. and Mrs. Gibbons left yesterday afternoon for their wedding tour. On their return they will live in Berkeley. Among those who witnessed the marriage yesterday were:

Dr. and Mrs. L. D. Dorr, Dr. and Mrs. Morton Mrs. Olive Evans, Miss Julia Evans, Miss Ida Gibbons, Miss Jessie Dorr, Dr. and Mrs. Henry W. Miss Nora Evans, Miss Beatrice Evans.

Mrs. C. Elwood Brown, who is charmingly Miss Childs in Europe, writes enthusiastically of her sojourn on the continent. She is enjoying her sojourn in France, where she will join her brother and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Bergson. Mrs. Brown, who will remain in Europe until late in December, will return to California by way of the Mediterranean.

The principal speakers of the occasion were Mrs. Elinor Carlisle of Berkeley, prominent in the affairs of the Child's Welfare League, and Miss Anna Chase of the W. C. T. U. Vocal numbers were given by Miss Judith Reusche.

Mrs. Carlisle in her address urged the necessity of women making an effort to become more important factors in the civic life of communities. She impressed upon her hearers the need of energetic work between now and the election in October to insure a victory for equal suffrage.

Local stores and shopkeepers are displaying the yellow colors of the suffragists this week. In many of the show windows large placards calling the attention of voters to proposed amendment 8 are in position, ornamented with yellow flowers.

ARMAND CAILLEAU WILL RESUME BUSINESS HERE

New Store in Post Street to Open in September

Great pleasure has been occasioned by the news that the firm of Armand Cailleau, formerly one of the oldest in San Francisco, will resume business here, the new store to be located at 222-225 Post street.

Armand Cailleau first established himself here in 1878 as an importer of ladies' suits and gowns, and his new shop will be an exclusive specialty house of ladies' and misses' suits, coats, gowns and waists.

On account of the extensive alterations to be made in the building in Post street, the fall opening will be delayed until the close of September. This delay will enable the buyers to secure the latest fashions in everything, and the display will be the most complete and attractive ever shown in San Francisco.
