The first aid packages contain only sufficient bandages and dressings for one wound, and a sufficient number of packages are placed in each car to take care of a large number of wounds should it happen that any great number of persons incur injuries at the same time. Danger from train accidents, which has been minimized to such an extent during the last few years by modern equipment and safety devices, is further diminished by having these first aid packages at hand at all times, and practically all train crews have become skilled in rendering the first aid work.

ANOTHER TRIUMPH SCORED FOR AMATO

Barytone Offers a Program of German and Italian Songs, Some Modern

Another enthusiastic audience listened to Pasquale Amato, the "Caruso of barytones," last night at Scottish Rite auditorium, and applauded his interpretations of German and Italian music.

While the audience was not so large as that of last Tuesday evening, its more slender proportions did not affect either the singer's enthusiasm nor his generosity in encores.

Of the programmed numbers, the aria from Puccini's early and seldom heard opera, "La Villi"; an aria from "Il Trovatore," by Verdi, and the racconto from Franchetti's "Germania" were his best, though a group of three modern Italian songs was a charming, melodic offering.

"E Allor Perche," the duet between Nedda and Tonio in "Pagliacci," was sung by Amato and Madame Longari and was a beautiful number. The soprano was heard advantageously in several offerings, notably Schubert's "Serenade" and "Vissi d'Arte" from Puccini's "La Tosca," which latter selection brought out the dramatic quality of the singer's voice as well as its sympathetic character.

But one more opportunity remains to local music lovers to hear the star barytone of the Metropolitan opera house, New York. His final concert takes place next Sunday afternoon at Scottish Rite auditorium, when the program will be made up of "request" numbers, and will thus consist principally of operatic arias, in the rendition of which Amato has no peer on the concert stage. Among other numbers which he will offer will be the prologue from Leoncavallo's masterpiece, "Pagliacci."
