presides over one of the most elaborate country homes down the peninsula, near Las Gatas. There are always weekend guests during the winter as well as the summer, since the family lives there the year round. The Welch's plan also to remain through the season at their new country home.

The gayest season Newport has known in several years reached its climax at the elaborate Louis XVI party given by Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, frequently referred to by cheerful critics as the fish ball. A jeu d'esprit that has doubtless done duty before. However, the ball cost $50,000 and was as beautiful an entertainment as any given in Newport. Peggy Shippen describes it:

"The goddess of the garden should have been Mrs. Fish herself—but it was not. 'Twas a professional who postured that night—unless I'm much mistaken. Dawn and the other allegorical attitudinizers were in plenty, and altogether they said that the scene, beautiful beyond expression, was well worth the trouble and outlay expended in procuring the wondrous effects produced. What matters a trifle like $50,000. The result was a dream."

Mrs. Fish was in Louis XVI costume, as suited the character of the fête, which is to go down to posterity as a XVIIIth Century Fantastic—or is it Fantasy? The guests, like the hostesses, were clad in the garb of the period; and a troop of Louis XVI boys, in silks and satins, bearing lighted lanterns, executed a dance which had been arranged for the occasion under the supervision of professionals. After supper there were Russian dancers, Pletroff and Hartle, who danced to the Russian orchestra, and then the real ball proceeded.

It is interesting to know that no breakfast was served at the fish ball, and that, driven by hunger, a band of guests, headed by the charge d'affaires of the German embassy, Hanlon Halmaussen, went to a restaurant, where they breakfasted and danced until dawn.

The gowning at Newport this year is said to have been of an oriental magnificence, although French in effect. At the recent tennis tournament the sartorial display detracted attention from the courts. The tennis players wore simple outing frocks of Miss Eleonora Sears made her a conspicuous figure. On one occasion at the Casino she stood talking to Mrs. Arthur Burden of New York, who wore a directoire costume with a coat of Persian silk and a queer picture hat, and for a finishing bit of estheticism carried a long director's staff. Little Miss Sears must have looked very much as she does on the polo field of Burlingame, in a dark blue Norfolk jacket, short white linen skirt, tennis shoes and a sailor hat.

Mr. and Mrs. John Cowdin, father and stepmother of Cheever Cowdin, who married Miss Florence Hopkins, are in Newport, returned from their own wedding abroad. Other guests well known in San Francisco are Mrs. Oelrichs and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt Jr., who were guests at the fish ball; Miss Esther Moreland of Pittsburg, who spent last winter at the Fenwick estate; George Marye, are also at Newport. Miss Edith Deacon, the niece of Charles Baldwin, who is visiting her grandmother, and Hubert Dotzler, who is Baldwin, is one of the belles of the season and is one of Miss Eleonora Sears' close friends.

Society maids and matrons might have found opportunity to test their French at Scottish Rite hall Wednesday evening, where a season of French drama opened under the direction of Andre Perrier and Hubert Dotzler, who accompanied Clifford Cook to California several months ago and will remain throughout the winter. He is an actor as well as a director, and is assuming leading roles in the plays to be given in French. Among those interested in the season, which is unique in San Francisco, are Conzel Henri Merou, Amédée Moulins, Paul Vernet, and John Galois. The first performance Wednesday evening was an interesting success.

Fashions of the season—which as always are old fashions revived—will send debutantes to their grandmothers' chests for flowered taffetas and real laces. The new double skirt effects so much worn lend themselves to the use of lace draperies. Lace shawls, large and small, may be draped as tunics and panniers, the ends crisscrossed and left to hang in front, back or at the side. Where a diagonal crossing is desired the lace may be drawn over the waist line and adjusted to partially drape the corsage.

Smaller shawls may be used as fichus or berthas, with the ends drawn to the front of sides, taken under the girdle. The narrow, wide, and wide, which were once so fashionable, laid flat about the neck, are again the smart mode.

At some of the recent weddings the lace overdress has been effectively used in bridesmaid costumes. Notably at the Crocker-Whitman marriage, where, however, the wedding robe had been especially woven and was not an heirloom.

Apropos of weddings, the season's brides are slighting the old custom of placing omens in the wedding cake and of throwing their bouquets to the bridesmaids. In New York at the marriage of Miss Therese Thompson and William Benet they must surely have been observed, since it was at the wedding in San Francisco that the then Miss Thompson caught the bouquet and met her fate. Her engagement to William Benet was announced several weeks ago, proving the origin of the Langhorne Parker wedding neither custom was observed, and they are rarely seen at fashionable weddings in the east.

While in San Francisco a few weeks ago I. Townsend Burden denied that he had said the glory of Newport was waning. Since his return east he has been deluged with protests, in spite of denials. In an eastern writer describes his dilemma:

"Returning from a month's tour of California, I. Townsend Burden of New York and Newport was greeted at the Denver office of his father in law, Dennis Shedy, a banker, by a heap of assorted mail missives postmarked Newport, Long Island, New York and elsewhere. They were all, upon examination, newspaper clippings and scribbled reproaches. In them he was quoted as predicting the downfall of Newport. The correspondents expressed themselves freely as to his position as the New York summer capital. Most all of New York clubdom and the social colony at Narragansett Pier was represented."

LOOK YOUNG

Why Look as Old as Harmlesslah

When one harmless treatment for one dollar will make you look five years younger? Ladies, don't have your cuticle flamed, or the lifting of paraffine injected beneath the skin without having a free consultation with Mrs. Pone. Why take those horrible chances when I can remove your wrinkles with my harmless remedy, which has been proven by many ladies of 50 and left my office looking 25? Have many letters to prove it. Call on a specialist, then call and see me. My own face will tell the tale. Have never used any but my own preparation. I have customers who have been treated in Paris, London, Berlin and New York. They state that they can look young. Remember, I have been forced by law to prove my remedy, but as the law did not permit me to demonstrate in court my wrinkle eradicator, many of my customers have come to me from all over the world, and have sworn that Mrs. Pone's wrinkle remover has removed their wrinkles. Call and convince yourself.

A lecture and demonstration will be given Tuesday, 2:30 p. m., 110-11 Whittell building, 166 Geary.
