Principal Murphy always exercised a close censorship over telephone calls, but as a result of the affair on last Wednesday he decided to put a ban on all telephoning to and from pupils. The following order was issued:

Teachers: Advise your pupils that from this time forth no pupil shall be called to the telephone, nor shall use the school telephone in any manner whatever, except when sent by a teacher on school business; neither will the school be a medium of exchange between parents, pupils and business houses for the purpose of making dates and appointments. In extreme cases a teacher or principal may transmit and receive messages to and from parents and also deliver messages to pupils in emergencies. At least one-fourth of the time of the principal is consumed in answering telephone calls on matters which should be attended to by them before leaving home in the morning. The purposes of this restriction is to better safeguard and protect the interests of both pupil and parent, as well as the school. C. H. MURPHY.

wanted to have a good time, with the girls as company.

Investigation yesterday failed to develop any facts tending to show that the case had any "white slavery" connection, or that any of the three young men involved could be accused as "slavers." The later word, used in a headline in reference to the case in The Call yesterday, was stronger than was warranted by the facts. CLERKS LIKELY TO BE FREED

The cottage was rented two months ago by Herrerias, and the police believe that Wednesday was the first time O'Dea or Devlin, who are clerks, had visited it.

Neighbors say that there has been a good deal of carousing, that many girls have visited the cottage, and that on several occasions cases of beer have been taken in. Police Judge Sullivan probably will order the trio to give up the cottage, and, unless unexpected developments occur, the case may be dropped.
