

South Is Bitter Disappointment to the Bull Moose

CURRY WINS BY HEAVY MAJORITY

Nearly All the Democratic Candidates in Governor Johnson's Home County Elected By Big Margins

Los Angeles might not exceed 15,000 and that his plurality in Alameda county would be from 5,000 to 7,000.

The early partial and incomplete returns showed the most surprising upsets in some of the counties that the progressive party managers relied on to take them down to the Tehachapi with something like an even break.

Santa Clara and Fresno counties were the big surprises to the progressive party managers.

The early partial and incomplete counties indicated that in communities that were confidently relied upon to give Roosevelt a lead of at least 6,000, Wilson was running neck and neck with the progressive party candidates, and the returns available at midnight indicated that Wilson might carry both counties by slender margins.

In northern California Humboldt and Alpine were assembling the only counties that had escaped the landslide to Wilson.

Below the Tehachapi the partial and incomplete returns indicated that Wilson had surely carried San Diego county, and the available returns from Riverside, Orange, Imperial and Los Angeles indicated that the complete returns would show Roosevelt in the lead, but declined to define his claim in plurality terms.

PLURALITY GIVEN AS 8,000 OR 9,000

The Associated Press at 2 a. m. this morning makes the following statement: "Tabulation of returns from California counties up to 12:30 a. m. indicated that Woodrow Wilson had carried the state by between 8,000 and 9,000.

"Roosevelt will probably come to the Tehachapi with about 14,000 plurality, but almost without exception the northern counties of the state gave pluralities to Wilson, ranging from a few votes in Yuba county to 8,000 in San Francisco county.

"The indicated plurality for Wilson north of the Tehachapi, if the present ratio is kept up, will be in the neighborhood of 23,000.

CULTURE TO RULE IN WHITE HOUSE

Wife and Three Daughters of President Elect Are Charming Personalities

[Special Dispatch to The Call]

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—With Governor Wilson's removal from Princeton to Washington, the White House will become the home of a charming mother and three cultured daughters.

Clever and talented, each with some fixed vocation in life, fond of entertaining and of entertainment without being absorbed in and by society, there is sure to be four years in which rational and gracious southern hospitality will be dispensed at the White House.

Mrs. Wilson passed most of her youth in Georgia. She is an artist. Her friends say she undoubtedly would have made a great name for herself if she had chosen to continue her work along those lines in preference to marrying the president elect.

Miss Margaret Woodrow Wilson is 25 years old. She was born in Gainesville, Ga. Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson is a year younger. She, also, was born in Gainesville. Miss Eleanor Randolph Wilson, the other daughter, was born in Middletown, Conn. None of the Wilson girls went to school after they were 10 years old. Their studies have been directed entirely by their father and mother.

Miss Margaret Wilson has devoted most of her mature years to the study of music. She has a fine soprano voice which has been cultivated under the tutelage of several competent teachers. She usually spends the winter in New York with the purpose of prosecuting her art. She is fond of all outdoor sports; plays tennis, basket ball and rides with grace. She is very fond of dancing.

Miss Jessie Wilson is perhaps the most serious of the three daughters. She is a member of the national board of the Y. M. C. A., and is very active in the work of the institution. She is a member of the Kappa of the woman's college of Baltimore.

She is the executive of the family, taking a keen interest in her father's campaign for the presidency. It is said she accepted her judgment on many matters of importance relative to it. She, like Miss Margaret, is fond of sports, being an adept at tennis, riding and swimming.

Miss Eleanor Wilson—"Nell," as she is affectionately called by members of her family—received her later tutelage under the care of a governess. She has inherited her mother's talent for painting.

"CALL" FLASHES NEWS TO CITY

Entire Populace Gets News of Winner as Thousands of Arcs Go Out Simultaneously in All Sections

San Francisco winked an eye and the people knew that Wilson had won. At a word from The Call 3,850 street lamps in all parts of the city went out simultaneously at exactly 8:19 last night. For 30 seconds there was darkness, but darkness that carried no gloom to the hearts of the thousands of jubilant voters who had marked their ballots for Woodrow Wilson.

The signal system arranged by The Call worked without a hitch. Nothing like it had ever been attempted here before, and nothing ever spread the news of an election result with such rapidity. A second before 8:19 and the street lamps were burning brightly. The watchers in their homes and the crowds on the rain spattered pavements were waiting expectantly. The issue was still in doubt, the fate of the nation, so to speak, hung in the air. Men talked loudly to bolster up falling hopes or discussed the chances of their favorite candidates in low tones.

They knew, from the announcement made in The Call yesterday, that if the lights went out once it meant victory for Wilson. If they blinked twice the winks were in favor of the big bull moose, and if three intervals of darkness came in succession the victory lay with Taft.

WHOLE CITY GETS FLASH

This was the situation just a second before 8:19 last night. What would the strange High God do? How many times would they wink? The youngest child whose mother had allowed it up with her at the window understood The Call's unique signal plan, and the throng in the rain was waiting.

Of a sudden the lights went out. That was all, but for the next half minute those darkened arcs held a secret that all San Francisco was straining its eyes and eating its heart out to know. Would they light up and go out again, or light up and stay lit. Would it be Wilson or Roosevelt, or three outs for Taft?

Those 30 seconds seemed an hour. San Francisco held its breath. Then, as suddenly as they went out the arcs shone forth again, and more significant still, they kept on shining. If they had gone out again it would have been Roosevelt, but they didn't. They just continued to cast a white light through the rain, the spotlight of Wilson's success.

Best of all, everybody saw The Call's signal. Any man or woman who was anywhere near a street light shared the news with the whole city. It was a universal signal that cast its shadow on the sky and on the streets. The most distant outlying districts as well as the people down town saw it and caught its meaning. And all about the bay, wherever the glow of the city's myriad of lights can be seen reflected in the heavens, that brief interval of darkness told the story of the great national contest.

MAYOR GIVES SANCTION

The turn of a switch did it all, or rather the turn of many switches at the same instant. It was done by the hearty sanction of Mayor Rolph, as well as the courtesy of the Pacific Gas and Electric company and the United Railroads, the latter controlling the lights along many streets traversed by its lines. Arrangements had been made with General Manager G. C. Holberton of the gas and
