ARMY REORGANIZATION IS EFFECTIVE TODAY

Major General Murray Commander of Western Department and Third Division

By order of the president, the new order of things in the army becomes effective today and the reorganization scheme becomes an actuality.

The troops of the mobile army stationed within the continental limits of the United States are organized tactically into divisions, subdivided into brigades, while for military purposes the territory of the United States and its possessions is organized into geographical departments, the territorial organizations heretofore existing being discontinued.

Major William R. Sample, adjutant general.

One of the most radical changes in the reorganization plan comes for the coast artillery, now entirely separate from the mobile army.

The Pacific district is to be commanded by Colonel John P. Wisser, coast artillery corps, who relinquishes command today of Fort Winfield Scott and the artillery subdistrict of San Francisco, and who will establish his headquarters at Fort Miley. effective today and the reorganization scheme becomes an actuality.

The troops of the mobile army stationed within the continental limits of the United States are organized factically into divisions, subdivided into brigades, while for military purposes the territory of the United States and its possessions is organized into geographical departments, the territorial organizations heretofore existing being discontinued.

Major General Arthur Murray, who has been commander of the western division, becomes today commander of the western division, the latter consisting of the Seventh and Eighth brigades.

and thereupon she designed three costumes which could be easily exchanged and made to wear at the three hops by three girls.

Before the date set for them to leave for Annapolis the three gowns were lying on the large couch in their studio apartment and beside them were all the accessories chosen with the utmost care. It had nearly beggared the girls to buy them, but at least they were to have one glorious time.

At the house of the chaperon they were gowned and ready to step into the wagonette that was to take them to the first of the hops, and the gentle southern matron who did duty so often in the capacity of chaperon for out of town girls thought she had never seen a more charming trio.

Lieutenant Cummings arrived with his brother officers, and the two young men were presented to the girls they were to escort. Lieutenant Cummings himself had eyes for no one but Julia. On her way to the hop Edith thanked her guardian angel, who had hovered over her with the brilliant idea that the girls had helped her to carry out. She would have felt very uncomfortable with this good looking young officer if she had been robed in anything less genuine than the gown she wore. Somehow he seemed different from the men she had gone out with heretofore.

At the hop she had four dances with Lieutenant Smithson, and as she passed and repassed Julia and Barbara in the great throng of happy dancers she observed that they, too, seemed pleased with their escorts. Altogether Edith's heart was singing and she felt more joyful than she ever remembered having felt. In her workaday world there was little real social life aside from the studio teas they gave themselves, there was nothing brilliant, nothing formal, and—she admitted it early in the evening—no men like young Lieutenant Smythson. Edith was sure he was well possessed of this world's goods and she felt, with a drop of spirits, that she would never see him again after this one merry week at Annapolis.

At the succeeding hon the girls were Assistant to the chief surgeon-Major Willard F. Truby, medical corps.

The officers detailed for staff duty are practically the same as those who have served on the staff of the western division, and the change will affect conditions at army headquarters in this city but little.
The passing out of existence of the departments which prevalled under the former scheme, as the departments of California and of the Columbia, means the relief of the officers who commanded them, but they have been reassigned as commanding officers of one brigade or another.

Newest Type of Little Car 'Is Placed on Display by S. G. Chapman

From Detroit During January-Auto Notes

By LEON J. PINKSON

Another new car has made its appearance in San Francisco. The latest it for the rear of the show. type to enter the local field is the six passenger Hupmobile, the first of which was placed on display yesterday by S. G. Chapman, the northern California distributer. The six passenger car is now being looked upon as the most popular model by the leading automobile builders of the country, and the Hupp factory, in keeping with its motor car manufacturers, has designed a six passenger machine that not only combines power and sturdiness, but only weighs 2,400 pounds fully equipped.

In general appearance the car dif-fers little from the smaller Hupps, save that the wheel base is longer, it being 126 inches. It has the same mo-tor that won favor in the "32" Hupmo-bile through its low cost of operation. At the recent Chicago show, accord-ing to letters received from Mr. Chaning to letters received from Mr. Chap-man, the six passenger Hupmobile at-tracted much interest. The booth was crowded at all times, and many com-plimentary remarks regarding the attractiveness of the car were heard.

Big Cadillac Shipments—That this will be the banner automobile year is shown by the records of shipments being made out of Detroit. During January the Michigan Central railway shipped 3,006 carloads of motor cars, against 1,397 last January. Of this number with the exception of one small car, the Cadillac led all others with 632 carloads. Chalmers shipped 141 carloads, Hudson 150 and Packard 81. These were the Cadillac's nearest competitors. Reports show that the west is holding its own, but the southeast is running way ahead of all former records.

Buick Factory Finances—"According to its annual statement, filed with the secretary of state of Michigan, the Buick Motor company of Flint possesses assets amounting to $12,271,200, which represents an increase of $1,164,596," writes Charles S. Howard, the head of the Howard Automobile company, Buick representatives on the coast. "The liabilities of the Buick company on the same date, exclusive of its surplus totaled $5,676,882. Its surplus account, of course, figures as a liability—$6,594,318. The annual statement as a whole shows the wonderful increase in the commercial value of the Buick plant."

"And wear the same dress to all three hops?" interrupted Julia, scornfully. "Not I!"

at Home, It Is Said LONDON, Feb. 14.-That a workhouse training makes a child more polite and better mannered generally than upbringing in a home is the repolicy to remain in the front ranks of markable claim made by G. W. John son, headmaster of the poor law schools maintained by the guardians of St. Mary's, Islington.

"You will probably not find anywhere more polite children than those in this school," said Mr. Johnson yesin this school," said Mr. Johnson yesterday. "You can only train children properly when they are entirely under your care. There are 600 children, naturally from the very poorest homes, in this institution. They live here altogether, and they are under constant supervision from the moment they awake until they go to bed again. They have their baths, their meals, and even their playtime, under the eyes of their teachers; therefore we can do something with them.

"What is the use of teaching a boy to use his fork properly if, when he goes use his fork properly if, when he goes home to dinner, he finds his parents doing the reverse of what he has been taught?" asked Mr. Johnson. "Here we can see that he does what he has been taught."

To show what bad things children learn from their parents, Mr. Johnson told a story of an L. C. C. teacher in an elementary school who was asking the children for some alternative words for "father." He had been told parent and pater and all sorts of words, but he wanted another, so he tried to kindle a child's memory by asking:

"What does your mother call you father?"

"Silly old fool," was the unexpected reply.

"That would be impossible here," said Mr. Johnson, who went on to explain how polite the little ones under his care were.

"If a child crosses the playground in front of me, he invariably asks leave with 'Excuse me,' he said, "while if a boy is entering a door with a little girl he will always say, 'After you." 7722 Girl's Dress Closing in Front, 10 to 14 years.

WITH SIX GORED SKIRT, WITH SHORT THREE-QUARTER OR LONG SLEEVES, LOW OR HIGH

Front closings are extremely smart this season for girls as well as for their elders, and they are very practical always. In the frock illustrated this feature is combined with others equally smart and practical to make a most satisfactory model. The blouse is made with a big sailor collar and revers and with set, in sleeves that may be finished. with a big sailor collar and revers and with set-in sleeves that may be finished in elbow, three-quarter or full length. There is a separate shield that may be made either low or high with a stock collar. The skirt is cut in six gores and the front and back gores form panels. The blouse and skirt are joined at the waist line by means of a belt and the two are closed together at the left of the front. In the illustration the material is blue serge with trimming of white broadcloth and braid and that combination is always a good one, but there are a number of other wool materials that are pretty for this model and later, linen, pique and the like will be found equally satisfactory.

For the 12 year size the dress will require 6½ yards of material 26, 4½ yards 36 or 3% yards 44 inches wide with % yard 27 inches wide for the collar.

"Oh—" began Edith.

"I love you—I loved you the third night, but you were so exquisitely gowned that I knew wou must live in a mad, fashionable world which I could never enter and never drag you out of."

"I—I'll tell you a secret about those gowns if you'll promise never, never to tell the other girls," she said.

Barbara's. "He's too fashionable—he moves in a brilliant set—I—I had better forget these three perfect evenings," she sighed.

All three girls were silent and thoughtful on the way home the next day, and it was only when they took up their routine life at the studio again that they seemed to find one another companionable. They often referred to the hops, but far more often they thought of them—especially Edith. One day she had received a letter on the stationery of the U. S. S. Arkansas. It was a note from Lieutenant Smythson, saying that he would be in the New York port for 10 days when he hoped he might have the pleasure of seeing her.

The first time he came ashore he found her—found her in the little studio with the other girls, having their simple afternoon tea. In civilian's clothes he looked even more attractive to Edith, and the two other girls could see that the two were more than glad to be together again. Under one pretext and another Barbara and Julia left them alone at the tiny tea table.

"Miss Dunston, I might as well confess and tell you all," the young officer said after a few minutes.

"Confess?" asked Edith. "But what—what have you to confess to me?"

He laughed boyishly. "I have been thinking of you as a wealthy society girl who was so far out of my world as to make you unattainable."

Edith dropped three lumps of sugar in her tea.

"I—I can not tell you how happy it have been the said after the said and tell you have happy it have been the said and the said and tell you have happy it have been the said and the said and tell you have happy it have been the said and tell you have happy it have been the said and the said and tell you have happy it have been the said and tell you have happy it have been the said and the said and tell you have happy it have been the said and the said and tell you have happy it have been the said and the said and tell you have happy it have been the said and t
