INDICTMENTS AGAINST WILSON FIRM UPHELD

Stock Brokers Must Stand Trial in Federal Court for Connection With Baker Matter

Demurrer to the indictment against J. C. Wilson and B. A. Wilbrand of the stock brokerage firm of J. C. Wilson & Co., and for P. Burke, former outside man for the house, charging them with conspiring to falsify records and misappropriate funds of the Citicorp National bank in connection with Charles F. Baker's $201,000 defalcation, was overruled by Judge William C. Van Fleet yesterday.

The demurrer was argued by Attorney Frank Drew, but on every point the court sustained the indictment as drawn by United States Attorney John L. McNab.

During the argument the court repeatedly told Attorney Drew he did not seem to grasp the significance of the indictment. Attorney Drew contended that there should have been two counts, one charging a conspiracy to falsify the bank records and the second misappropriation of the funds.

The defendants were notified to be in court this morning at 10 o'clock, when their case will be set for trial.

STATEMENT OF FACTS ABOUT JAPANESE IMMIGRATION

Figures From the United States Immigration Commission Easily Verified Careful Checking by an Expert Since the Year 1900

no more than 11,400, but two years later that number jumped to 24,000. The growth during the last decade was more significant. There were as many as 75,000 Japanese in 1910. The largest number residing, however, was in 1905, it being nearly 80,000. So much, then, for the history and extent of Japanese immigration during the last 50 years...

with that among the Japanese immigrants. Note also the composition of these foreign born whites. By far the majority of Japanese are confined to the western states, California containing the largest number. In 1910 the Japanese population in California was estimated at 65,000, made up approximately of 45,000 males, 6,000 females and 4,000 children.

According to this, Japanese are scattered all over the state. However, Los Angeles county contained the largest number, which was 11,600, while San Francisco and Sacramento had the next largest number of Japanese. Alameda and San Joaquin contained little over 4,000 each, while Santa Clara and Fresno had about 3,000 each. Three counties, Yolo, Contra Costa and Placer, had about 1,000 each. Their number gradually diminished in the remaining counties. However, the percentage they formed of the entire population in each county...

farmers or as farm hands, the latter predominating in number. The relation of the character of the crop to the employment of Japanese is well brought out in the following: On the 2,369 farms operated by white farmers the percentage of labor furnished by Japanese, according to the principal crops grown, was as follows:

Speaking of the wages of Japanese farmhands, the report of the bureau of labor statistics of California says: "The average wage paid by white farmers to white help was $1.38 per day with board and $1.60 per day without board, and to the Japanese $1.49 per day with board and $1.54 per day without board. This, however, can not be taken as the average earnings of the Japanese, for 49.2 per cent of the white men usually available for hand work..."

2. The "scums" of Japan never immigrated to the United States. Commission laborers formed 10,000 in one year but once, and on the whole, formed but less than a drop in the bucket on the basis of general immigration. The agreement of 1907 "has been loyally and rigidly kept by the Japanese foreign office, so rigidly that, for even students from Japan bound for American universities, the best bond of peace between the two countries, and it increasingly hard to get their passports. The Japanese population is slightly diminished since 1908, when it was estimated at 80,000. The census for 1910 says it was 75,000.

3. By far the great majority of Japanese immigrants are employed by the western states, and in particular California. But they do not congest. They are scattered all over the state, though the majority are found in rural districts. Occupationally the most important for Japanese is agriculture. Here they are said to be now indispensable. Seventy thousand are employed by the own merchants and tradesmen. A slightly less number are found in domestic service. Some are employed by railroads. In none of the more important occupations do the Japanese now compete to the detriment of the general standard of living. With this largely occupied, on the whole, the Japanese are getting just as much as anybody else, if not more.
