

MAURY DIGGS HEARS FATE TOMORROW

Attorneys Will Appeal, Whatever the Sentence; Can Get Five Years

CAMINETTI LOOKS FOR WIFE'S AID

"She Will Testify If My Mother Asks Her," Says Youth on Trial

Maury I. Diggs, former state architect, will be sentenced tomorrow by Judge Van Fleet for his violation of the Mann act in connection with the notorious elopement from Sacramento to Reno, Nev., of Diggs, F. Drew Caminetti, Marsha Warrington and Lola Norris.

Diggs was found guilty on four counts of an indictment containing six counts. He is liable for the maximum penalty, $5,000 fine and five years' imprisonment, on each.

Whatever Judge Van Fleet fixes as the sentence, Diggs and his relatives and friends are positive he will not be shut in a federal prison until the supreme court has reviewed the case.

Touting Caminetti thinks the government's evidence so far has helped to clear him of the charges. "It only remains for Lola Norris to tell her story, and tell the facts, and I will have no fear of the outcome. Miss Norris can clear me by telling the plain truth."

The defense has decided to put Caminetti on the witness stand. Whether Mrs. Caminetti will testify is undecided.

"She wouldn't testify for me, even if I asked her to," said Caminetti. "but she will for my mother, so I think if my attorneys need her badly she will tell what she knows."

Marshall Woodworth, one of the leading counsel for the defense, today completed his bill of exceptions which he will submit with a motion for a new trial when court convenes Tuesday.

William H. Adams, 1319 Cole street, a juror in the Caminetti case, will be able to appear. Adams was injured in an automobile accident near San Jose Saturday, incurring a fractured foot and a wrenched shoulder. It was feared for a time his injuries were so severe the trial would have to be postponed for several days.

MISS LUCRETIA DEL VALLE WHO SCORES IN "MISSION PLAY"

AUTHOR DISCOVERS TALENTED ACTRESS

Miss del Valle's Capabilities Recognized by John Steven McGroarty

HER ANCESTORS OF PROUDEST LINEAGE

Dramatic Experience Brief But Successful; Wins Popularity Here

By WALTER ANTHONY
What tends to make John Steven McGroarty's "Mission Play" at the Columbia theater, almost as much of a ceremonial in its impressiveness as a drama is the fact that the players have been selected with special fitness for their roles in the historic pageant-play.

From the Indians, who, in the second act, give a performance of a folk dance, to the pretty girls who revive the dances of early California and the principals, who carry on the epochal plot, all are adapted by a natural fitness for their roles.

In no particular, however, has the choice of a player fallen with such fitness as on the diminutive person of Lucretia del Valle, who plays the role of Senora Josefa Yorba in the picturesque third act laid at the Mission San Juan Capistrano.

The propriety of Mr. McGroarty's selection of her for the important role grows out of the fact that her aunt, Dona Josefa del Valle de Forster, whose name suggests that of the character enacted by her niece in the play, bought, after the secularization of the missions, the very land in which the pitiful but beautiful scenes of the third act of the "Mission Play" are laid. Daughter of a former state senator, Miss del Valle's ancestry came with Portola and Father Junipero Serra when they made their pilgrimage into California from Mexico and tried to relocate lost Monterey bay.

The bell beside which Miss del Valle is posed comes from the Mission San Juan Capistrano and was loaned to the production by the park museum management. It and the other bell exhibited at the Columbia theater this week are historic and beautiful emblems from a remote and romantic past.

Miss del Valle's dramatic experience has been brief but successful. She was "discovered" by Mr. McGroarty in Los Angeles at Morosco's Burbank theater, when the author of the "Mission Play" was looking for proper characters to interpret his work.

Possessed of a beautiful speaking voice of lovely resonance and sympathy, she exhibits the type essential to the proper interpretation of her part. When Mr. McGroarty suggested that she appear as Senora Josefa her heart leaped at the thought.

"It appealed to me with the tenderest of pleasure," she said, "and the longer the play's success in San Gabriel lasted the more I became in love with my work. Indeed, it does not seem like work at all, but rather resembles the performance of a delightful duty, which, like Shakespeare's idea of charity, blesses those who gave as well as those who receive."

Charley White is scheduled to go 12 rounds with Johnny Griffiths at Canton, O., tonight. Charley believes Griffiths is a tough fighter and knows he will have to fight all the way to win.
