THE NATIONALS DEFEATED

A Reverse on Their Second Visit to Baltimore.

A Closely Contested Game Throughout--The Washington Pets Out-Played, Out-Played, and Out of Luck--Baltimoreans Elated--The Last Inning the Decisive One--Chance to Get Even Today.

A Pretty Contest in Baltimore. The Nationals made their second visit to Baltimore yesterday and met with their first defeat this season. They were out-played and out-batted, and what was worse still for them, all of the good luck seemed to be with their opponents.

The audience was large, quite an increase over that of the previous game, and demonstrates that the citizens of the Monumental City will patronize the sport when satisfied that they will be treated to a first-class exhibition.

The Baltimoreans commenced business in the second inning, and by good batting obtained two runs and there they stopped. The Nationals found the fielding so sharp, and did so little batting, that when the sixth inning was reached they had not a run to their credit.

But here the luck was broken and weak began, and so constant and heavy was the batting that two runs were obtained and two more were put on bases before a halt was called. It looked as if a number of runs would be piled up, but an ending was quickly put to that sort of business and the innings closed with the game a tie. In this state it continued until the last inning was reached, where the Baltimoreans won the game.

Deasley hit to Warner, who had little time to spare, and throwing wide of first the runner reached third, and by a short throw of Sawyer's to second, to head off Daley, he came home.

The game was closely contested throughout, and the result came near setting the spectators wild with hilarity. They had good cause to rejoice, as it is the first game in about three years that has been won in the Monumental City from the Nationals.

Appended is the score:

Table with columns: BATTING, NATIONALS, INNINGS, and scores for various players like Jones, Dickerson, etc.

INNINGS. Baltimoreans..... 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

Runs on bases--Baltimoreans, 8; Nationals, 4.

Runs on called balls--Fowler, Evans, Smiley and Daley.

Runs on--Richmond, 2; Say, Daley, Powell and Trot.

Wild pitches--Dessley, 1.

Balls called--On Lynch, 30; on Daley, 57.

Time of game--4:15 o'clock, these two times will meet again on the National grounds, and the home boys have promised to return the compliment paid them yesterday.

It is doubtful if a match stronger than that that now gathered together in Baltimore can be found, and it is safe to say that they will treat all the spectators to a first-class exhibition of the beauties of the game who go out to see them play today.

Burglaries on Capitol Hill. The residence of L. W. Tolman, 913 East Capitol street, was entered by the burglar on Sunday morning last and robbed of money and other property valued at $75.

Also about the same time the residence of Charles M. Bryant, No. 613 East Capitol street, was entered and about $50 worth of property was stolen. These burglaries and robberies, when taken in connection with the fact that there were fifty-seven arrests on Saturday night, present a strong argument in favor of an immediate increase of the police force.

"Snakes as a rule to the thief, for what was any disturbance caused in his nefarious business.

Sunday-School Lecture Course. The second lecture of the course of the Sunday-school of the Fifth-Street Presbyterian church last evening was successful in every respect. The lecture was upon "Snakes as a rule to the thief," by Professor R. T. Greener, dean of the law department of Howard University.

The audience was large and appreciative, and there was some excellent singing by Messrs. Torley, Plowden, Smith and Butler, with Bellini's Feast at the organ.

The speaker gave a rapid sketch of Athens in the fifth century, B. C. He was not only a student of philosophy, but a good and bad influence at work in the state. The prescriptive philosophy was treated of as preparatory to a study of the Socratic, and illustrations were given of the personal appearance, vices, statures and peculiarities of his long career as a public character. The professor gave extracts from Aristotle's "Ethics" of the philosopher and his "thinking shop," and the pupils of Socrates were mentioned--particularly Xenophon, Alcibiades and Plato. Socrates' method of a teacher in the domestic and domestic, general sportive character, often apparent aimlessness, but always having the objective view to expose ignorance and strengthen real knowledge. Socrates was the antithesis of the sophists. They aimed at display, show, loved money and the petty conquest of a trifling dispute. Value of the subjects treated of by Socrates lay in the new and original manner of the condition of woman, education of children, duty toward the state and our fellow-men, vital questions, which can never be exhausted when the student of the art of life. Morality, virtue, happiness, vice, all were prominent points for discussion with Socrates and his disciples. He dared to be an independent thinker, sometimes followed the current, but more frequently held his own against it. He was often ahead of his time in his notions. Did not hesitate to brave popular character. He had that noble stubbornness of the unshaken Socrates, who followed the current, and John Brown. The trial, condemnation, death and last days of the teacher were treated of at length, and in summing up Professor Greener showed how he negatively the proper functions of the teaching art, to suggest thought rather than cram facts, to kindle ideas and inspire to brave, and kindly deeds. He was not a teacher of the art of what was noble, just and virtuous. They were ashamed to be idle, unproductive or to appear to lag behind in the race of life. He taught that the student should be a learner. His philosophy was not practical in our modern sense. It was more than practical. His theory underlay all practice--the conduct of life in relation to our fellow-citizens, our families and the state.

eighty-six years. Lacy's eccentricity consisted in believing himself the bride of our Saviour, and for hours she would remain in her chair waiting for orders. She is now relieved of her delusion, poor soul.

Another colored woman yesterday died of hemorrhage of the lungs at the remarkable age of 100 years. This speaks well for the longevity properties contained in Georgetown atmosphere.

A number of the good people of this place are laughing over a good joke played upon a recent acquisition to the population of Georgetown in the person of William Kane, of Baltimore. Kane is now residing at 107 Bridge street, Sunday night had occasion to pay a visit to his own room, and on entering was terrified in encountering a supposed burglar. Rushing down stairs he secured the services of a policeman, and returning, that official made a grab for the intruder and captured a stuffed man. Who says April fool?

Judge Wright's Case. In the case in general Term yesterday morning Mr. F. P. Stanton, counsel for Judge J. W. Wright, now serving a sentence of thirty days in jail for assaulting ex-Secretary Dulano, made application for a writ of habeas corpus, that he might give bail pending the hearing of his case on appeal. He argued that he had the right of appeal, and that if the judgment was affirmed the court had the power to enforce the original sentence.

The District Attorney cited the statute which gives the power of suspending sentence in capital and penitentiary cases, not in non-capital cases.

Mr. Stanton referred to the absence of rule on the subject, and said that if the court decided that Judge Wright could not be bailed it would be virtually deciding that a man must first serve his sentence before his case can be heard.

Chief-Justice Carter said they would not make such a rule, but the difficulty was as to the power of the court to enforce the sentence below. If they could not, an appeal was virtually a pardon.

After some further discussion the judgment was reserved.
