A., delivered an interesting lecture on "Human Propagation in Art and Anthropometry" before a large and cultured audience at the National museum on Saturday. The old fair grounds have been offered to Col. Ayres for a summer camping grounds for the troops at the Washington barracks. The command contains six batteries and about 900 officers and men. Rev. The Woman's Co-operative Industrial association will hold their regular monthly meeting this evening, at 7 o'clock, at their rooms, 510 Eleventh street northwest. This association is organized for the mutual benefit and exchange of thought on industrial subjects among women. A horse attached to a wagon driven by Mr. C. Vance, the author of the libretto, who in a most specially paid a high compliment to Mr. John P. Sousa, styling him the first operatic composer ever born in America, and said that Washington should be proud of bringing him forth. After the serenade Mr. Wallace handsomely entertained Messrs. Sousa, Vance, and a number of other gentlemen. A tall individual, with as many angles as a billiard table and attired in a suit of clothes that was made some time in the Pliocene age, wandered into John Hartnett's Saturday night and remarked that it was a fine evening. "It is, indeed a splendid evening," said John. "Yes, you're right," said the stranger; "can I have a drink for my money?" "Faith an' your money's as good as any man's harrit," Father O'Hoolahan, the barber's pence," said John, and he placed the bottle on the bar. The tall individual swallowed a gill, and then placed a little three cent piece with a big hole in it on the mahogany. "That's that," laughed John. "That's that," said the stranger. "You said I could have a drink for my money." "Faith an' oi did, an' oi'll trow in a invi-tashun av Scollivan along wid it." "There was a little bit of hair and a couple of teeth swept out of John's place this morning. The coroner was notified. The down-town barber has induced many of their up-town rivals to withdraw from the race for the barber's chair by stating that one down-town firm has already secured an enormous number of votes. The success of the fair is now assured. We would do ourselves an iniquity in attempting to describe our spring stock. Call and see for yourself. EDWARD L. LIND.
