

NEW SCHOOLS NAMED.

Twining, Morse, and Brent the Designations Selected by the Commissioners.

Sketches of the Distinguished Persons for Whom the Buildings are Named.

The district commissioners yesterday at their meeting deliberated upon the recommendations of the school board as to the names of the three new school buildings recently commenced. The school board, which has heretofore named all the school buildings, laid before the commissioners the names of Longfellow, Bryant and Cooper as the most appropriate designations for these schools. The commissioners decided that the naming of the schools was their peculiar province, and that the school board had nothing to do with the matter of nomenclature. They therefore directed the re-nomination of the board and named names of their own.

The building on Third street northwest, between M and N, was named the "Twining building," in compliment to the memory of the late Maj. Twining, a member of the engineering commission of the district from 1879, 1878, to May 5, 1882. Maj. Twining favored public school education, and the designation is considered especially appropriate in honor of his services to the district. He was moreover earnest in his efforts, more perhaps than any other person was, in the legislation providing for an increased water supply and for the improvement of the Potomac flats.

The building on R street, between Third and Fourth northwest, was named the "Morse building" in honor of Prof. Samuel Finley Breese Morse, the artist, traveler, investigator, and inventor. Prof. Morse is identified with the magnetic telegraph as an expert, and his artistic abilities and learning have gradually grown up in the memory and the knowledge of most people. He resided in this city for many years. Here were his experiments in magnetic telegraphy, and it was here that he first applied the electric current to the telegraph perhaps his best days. It was during his residence here that Congress, on March 3, 1843, appropriated $30,000 to permit him to pursue his experiments in magnetic telegraphy, and afterwards on March 3, 1844, that another appropriation was made of $4,000 to be expended under the supervision of the postmaster general, to keep in order and repair the government telegraphic line between Washington and Baltimore.

The building at Third and D streets southeast is named the Brent building, after Hon. Robert Brent, the first mayor of Washington, whose term of office—from 1802 to 1811—was continuously longer than that of any other incumbent of that office except Hon. William W. Seaton. This is an especially appropriate name. Mr. Brent was a prominent representative of one of the oldest and most prominent families in this section of the country, whose family name has been a synonym for ability and progressive spirit reflect later upon Maryland and Virginia, both as colonies and states. Mr. Brent was very earnestly in favor of introducing a wise and thorough system of public school education in this section, and was perhaps the ablest and most earnest coadjutor of Jefferson in his educational schemes. Mr. Brent drew up the plan of a public school system for the district, which was fully equal to the excellent one in operation at present. He was, however, in advance of his age, and, with all his abilities and efforts, failed to secure its adoption. The designation of this building, after him is therefore, a merited and graceful, though tardy, recognition of his services in behalf of the most distinctively national of American institutions, the public schools.

While many people regret that the schools were not named after the names of other distinguished men, the extent of designating two of them as the "Longfellow" and the "Bryant," yet the commissioners have applied especially appropriate and satisfactory names. Morse's name will live as long as telegraphy, Twining's will be remembered for many years as an ardent friend of the district, while Brent was the earliest, and though unsuccessful, the ablest pioneer save Jefferson of universal education in all the Chesapeake country.

MYSTERIOUS OCCURRENCE.

Singular Proceedings on Capitol Hill—The Police Investigating the Matter.

The large number of mysterious occurrences lately reported from East Washington have become the theme of general conversation in that section, while the old gossips are having a large sized picnic relating the ghostly and earthy stories that are in circulation.

A REPUBLICAN reporter having heard of a very strange and recent proceeding in South-east Washington repaired to that locality last evening to "report" the occurrence. The reporter, accompanied by several eye witnesses, was about as follows:

The night after Mr. Robert Campbell, the well known brickmaker, died, a vehicle, with two white horses attached to it, drove rapidly up to a lot in the rear of that gentleman's premises on South Capitol street, near the river, and the occupants, four men, sprang out and began digging a hole. The attention of the watchers over the body of Mr. Campbell, and several other persons in the neighborhood having been attracted by this time, the strange diggers left their work, and getting into the vehicle, were driven to the canal, where another man joined the party. They then disappeared going in the direction of the old Carroll mansion, but returned to the partially dug hole an hour or so later and proceeded with their work, afterward filling up the hole and dragging no trace of the vehicle in which it was placed. The party then drove toward the capitol at a rapid speed, disappearing in the gloom of night.

The police have been notified of the strange occurrence, and are now making inquiries. One old gentleman said a cannon was stolen from the arsenal some time ago, and that the men were probably after that. A policeman thought that the parties were thieves who had just been released after serving out their terms, and that they were digging up buried plunder. An old colored woman who had been aroused from her slumbers by the sound of pickaxe and shovel declared that she was four years ago, and that she was the driver of the vehicle, which was full of white-sheeted ghosts. The policeman's version is probably the most correct one.

THE LATE JOHN P. MILLARD.

The Suspicious of Poisoning not Alayed—What the Legal Custodian of the Body Says.

The alleged poisoning of John P. Millard, formerly of the sixth auditor's office, and the published statement that the Maryland authorities were moving to have the remains taken up for the purpose of holding a post mortem examination, having excited much comment and several denials, a REPUBLICAN reporter called upon the parties who have charge of the remains last night and received the following statement of the case:

The article in an afternoon paper relating to the death of John P. Millard, who died at the residence of Mrs. Amanda Beat, in Prince George county, Va., was calculated to mislead. Dr. Lewis positively stated that Mr. Millard died from the effects of poison. The body has been asked for by the Maryland authorities, and will be furnished them for analysis. This statement was made positively by the party who claim to be the legal custodian of the body, and appears to clinch the fact that the authorities of Maryland intend to settle the agitation by an analysis.

The Bicycle Race To-Day.

The bicycle race and wrestling tournament will take place at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon at Athletic park. Five competitors have entered for the twenty mile professional championship race, and it will be a tight pull and a close windup, as the men are in excellent trim for the contest, with the exception of Robinson, who is slightly unwell. Higham and Prince will leave after this race for Minneapolis, where they will contest for a purse of $1,000. They will also race at Rochester, Minn., and Springfield, Mass. The wrestlers,

LEGAL MATTERS.

Again Going for the Railway Company—Wills Filed Yesterday.

Three suits similar to the one entered by Bamberger against the Baltimore and Potomac railway were filed yesterday by Messrs. Hagney and Maddox. One is in the interest of Mrs. Susan Fitzgerald, who resides on Maryland avenue, between Ninth and Tenth streets southwest, who claims $5,000 for the injury sustained by the extent of her family since Aug. 23, 1883, by reason of the company permitting cars loaded with stock to stand on the tracks in front of her premises; the making up and breaking up of freight trains, and the excessive amount of yarding to create a nuisance injurious to health and an annoyance. It is also stated that the household furniture becomes damaged from the causes just mentioned, and the assertion that the constabulary has been injured during the period going to the extent of the amount claimed.

The second suit is brought by Mr. Henry M. Kuleit, residing on Maryland avenue, between Eleventh and Twelfth streets southwest, who claims a short time since, obtained an injunction against the company and compelled the stopping of the annoyances complained of. He thinks since Aug. 23, 1883, he and his property have been injured to the extent of $10,000, and claims damages to that amount.

In the remaining suit Charles F. Anderson is the complainant. He resides on Maryland avenue, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets southwest, and sets on foot the same case of grievance as the other complainants, and dates the existence of the annoyance from Aug. 23, 1883, for which he wants damages in the sum of $5,000.

Carroll and Miller, as attorneys for Lewis J. Davis, and David A. Walker yesterday filed their suit against William C. Murdoch and others, including the District of Columbia, for conveyance of lots 25 and 31 in square 217.

The last will of the late Robert Campbell was filed yesterday. He leaves all property to his wife, and in case of her death or marriage all property is to go to his children. His wife is appointed executrix.

He leaves all real estate and personal property he may possess of, also a certificate in the Washington Beneficial Endowment association; the relief due him from the metropolitan police department, Washington and Baltimore, to the heirs of Robert. Arthur Clements is appointed executor.

HORSES AND MULES.

Suggestions as to Their Treatment by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

In order to alleviate as far as possible the sufferings of horses and mules during the extremely hot weather, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals makes the following suggestions:

By loosening or removing check reins, lightening heavy loads, smothering frequently with fresh water the mouths and nostrils of animals that work or stand unsheltered during the hottest hours of the day, much relief can be given, and by little extra attention can often be found for them to stand in while delivering or changing loads, or waiting for employment.

When the harness is taken off, all parts of the body that have been covered by it should be carefully washed with a solution of tannin bark and water, to harden the skin and cleanse it of dirt and perspiration.

Fast driving during such weather is not only a positive cruelty, but a positive injury to animals.

Stables should be kept as clean and cool as possible.

As the individual efforts of the persons to whom this appeal is made will do far more toward relieving the suffering of the animals than anything the society can do, it is sincerely hoped it may accomplish its object.

MANY bodily ills result from habitual constipation, and if not relieved, may be broken and ruined by simple neglect. There is no medicine equal to Ayer's Pills to correct the evil, and restore the organs to natural health, and regular action.

Plenty of Peaches.

Eight thousand bushels of wheat were offered and sold on "chicago" yesterday at $1.12, $1.13, and $1.14 for Fultz, $1.13 to $1.14 for mixed, and $1.13 to $1.10 for Longberry; common grades ranged from 90c. to $1.10, as to quality; 1,812 bushels white brought 90c. for good and 89c. for fair, and a small lot of yellow sold for 85c. SPINAL CURVATURE AND GENERAL DEBILITY, IN A BOY OF SEVEN YEARS, CURED. 608 West Lombard Street, Baltimore, Md.

Messrs. E. A. PARSONS & Co.—Gentlemen: My little boy Willie, now seven years of age, up to about the month of June, has been a really delicate child, spending the greater part of his time in a rocking chair. Nothing seemed to arouse him from his torpid condition, and he was so weak and nervous that he could not walk, and the weakness of his muscles had to length developed spinal curvature, which caused one shoulder to drop to the ground, and he was unable to sit up to feed him from any source, and hearing so much of your Magnetic Cure, I made up my mind to try it.

After using your medicine, he is now a healthy child, and his shoulders are free, and not only these wonders, which seemed like miracles to me, have been effected, but his bowels are regular, and he has benefited in an amazing degree for my formerly delicate boy in that short time has become hearty and robust, and his appetite is now good, and he has difficulty in keeping him in it. He wants to be on the street playing all the time, and he is now a healthy child, and his appetite is now good, and he has difficulty in keeping him in it.
