The Rajah Won't Give Up His Prisoners. LONDON, Jan. 22.--The Dutch expedition which was sent from Padang in the early part of December to the west coast of Achene (Sumatra), to rescue from the hands of a rajah the crew of the twenty-five men, including an American, of the lost steamer Nisero, has returned without meeting with any success. An expedition destroyed several villages belonging to the rajah and his tribe. The crew have been removed into the interior, and the prospect that their lives will be spared is faint. When the British gunboat Pegasus was ordered to the latter part of November to aid the crew, the rajah threatened to kill all his captives if a shot was fired by the gunboat. The rajah's tribe had plundered the wreck of the Nisero of all that was valuable before the arrival of the Pegasus. The steamer was lost on the Achene coast on Nov. 12 while on a voyage from Surabaya to Singapore.

THE WRECKED STEAMER.

What Capt. Gabrielson, of the Revenue Cutter Dexter, Says of the Bravery of His Men.

New Bedford, Mass., Jan. 22.--The body (number 16) which was supposed to be that of Joel Nourse, of Boston, proves not to be his remains. The tug Nellie has returned to this city, the sea being so rough that she could not land at Gay Head. Hereafter all bodies brought here by the Vineyard Haven steamer will be retained here from the time of the cutter's departure for Boston. If at that time they are unidentified they will be forwarded to Boston. The body of Edward T. Hutchinson, of Cape Elizabeth, Me., has been identified. He is the one known as number 12, number 20 has been identified as Augustus Pearson, of Taunton.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Jan. 22.--The revenue cutter Samuel Dexter returned to Newport this morning. Capt. Gabrielson said he had no particulars to report to contribute. The lifeboat from the Gay Head did splendid service in bringing the survivors to the cutter, but he desired to emphatically contradict the statement made by the captain of the lifeboat, which made him (Gabrielson) say that the cutter's boat could not live in the surf. The work done by his boats he considers proof to the contrary. He says after the Gay Head lifeboat had been out a couple of hours his captain came to him and said that his men were worn out and could not stand any more work, and that he must be relieved. Gabrielson begged him not to do so, but come in with his men on board of the cutter and get some food and warm themselves, and a crew from the cutter should be put in the lifeboat until they were rested. There were then four men in the rigging of the wreck. At that time it was impossible for the cutter's boats to go to it. Finally the captain of the lifeboat put again and brought two men back. The lifeboat was then sent away leaving two men in the rigging. Capt. Gabrielson says they ought to have remained until all were brought away. Capt. Gabrielson says that many lives were lost by jumping from the cutter's boat to get into the lifeboat. The conduct of the officers and crew of the cutter, he states, is highly commendable. He will in his report to Secretary Folger recommend especially for the consideration of the department First Lieut. W. D. Roach, Second Lieut. H. Roach, and Third Lieut. C. D. Kennedy for bravery and exemplary conduct, and First Assistant Engineer Rockwell and Second Assistant Engineer C. W. Beckwith for the great care and attention bestowed upon the survivors.

A Lynchers Rescued from Jail.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 22.--Information has reached here that John A. Lightner, confined in the Pocahontas (W. Va.) county jail for participation in the lynching of Atchison, in Highland county, was released by a party of men, headed by Zib Allstock, who, after having enticed the jailer outside, threatened him with a gun and made him unlock the prisoner's cell. The jailer's wife ran into the village and gave an alarm, but no assistance came. Atchison was lynched by a mob of drunken men a short time ago for stabbing a man who still lives.

A Fire Deprives 600 Men of Employment.

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., Jan. 22.--The Hartford breaker of the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal company, under lease to the Philadelphia and Reading railroad company, was burned this morning, together with many coal cars. Loss $100,000. The fire threw 600 men out of employment. It was caused by the upsetting of a stove. The breaker was old, but was one of the largest in the region, and was the chief source of employment in Ashleyborough.

Dancing on Her Mother's Coffin.

KINGSTON, Ont., Jan. 22.--When an undertaker was putting the body of Catharine Malone, who died during a spree yesterday, into a coffin, he asked the daughter of the deceased, Mrs. Gray, if she desired to have the corpse in the way she lay. "No," she replied, "I don't want to see the body." She was then carried to the coffin and danced like a maniac, and only ceased her antics when compelled to by the constable. The whole family were intoxicated.

A MARE'S NEST.

The Result of a Kentucky Inquiry Into an Alleged Pennsylvania Whisky Ring.

Secretary Folger has forwarded to the house the correspondence called for by the following resolution introduced by Hon. John D. White, of Kentucky:

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be requested to furnish a copy of all correspondence relative to the collection of internal revenue relative to suspending the collection of tax for whisky listed in September, October, November, and December of the year 1880, also, to inform this house whether the time for collecting tax due on whisky listed October, 1880, in the Allegheny or Ohio whisky districts has been extended, and, if so, by what authority.

It transmitting this correspondence the committee on internal revenue in a letter addressed to the secretary says:

I have the honor to state that there are no letters on file in this office, and none have been received from collectors of internal revenue relative to suspending the collection of tax for whisky listed in September, October, November, and December, 1880. I may add that all taxes thus listed were collected very many months ago, probably nearly three years ago.

I presume, however, that the resolution intended to refer to the tax on the spirits produced and deposited in distillery warehouses in the months of August, September, October, and November, 1880, which were collected very many months ago, in the months of September, October, November, and December, 1880. It is a fact that in the case of taxes due on whisky listed in October, 1880, in the twenty-third collection district of Pennsylvania, to which special reference is made in the resolution, such taxes were collected in October, 1880, in that district at all, no doubt because they were all paid in due time.

I deem it proper to answer the question upon the supposition above stated, and will state that the only letters or correspondence on that subject between this office and collectors of internal revenue is contained in the account of the copies of letters and telegrams herewith transmitted.

Here follows a list of the letters and telegrams that passed between Collectors Case and Jackson, of which have heretofore appeared in print. The commissioner continues:

No other letters or telegrams on this subject have been received at this office from collectors of internal revenue. The time for collecting the tax due on whisky in the twenty-third or Allegheny district, in the state of Pennsylvania, has expired. The amount of the tax is also referred to on the subject, and may be instructive in that connection. It may not be improper for me to add, Mr. Secretary, that the notion that the collection of the whisky tax has been suspended is altogether chimerical. There has been a large overproduction of spirits in the years 1880, 1881, and 1882, and there has been much complaint of the burden which has been laid upon the industry. It is just to them to state that they have up to this date manifested a most commendable disposition to pay as respects the taxation of the industry. There has been no neglect upon the part of this office to enforce the payment of the tax, and whether matured, whether payment was burdensome to the taxpayer or not.

JIM'S PLUCK.

A Tale of '49, in Which a Present United States Senator Figures.

Chicago Herald.

"Yes, Flood and O'Brien went to keep a saloon, and so did Mackey," said an elderly passenger who had traveled about some and hadn't forgotten it. "I was out on the coast myself back in the 'fifties, and there's lots of men who now carry themselves pretty high that wasn't quite so proud then days. I know a case, a man what's bloomin' out fine now, was in them times a faro dealer. He owned his own game, a square one it was, too, and had nary a limit. The boys used to think Jim would give 'em a show for their white ally, and he had a good many friends in the camps. He had nerve, I tell ye, an' I believe it's nerve has made him what he is. Nothing like true grit to send a man prancing to the front of the crowd. One Sunday he was rumin' his lay-out in a little shanty in our gulch, when a gang o' teamsters from over the range tackled the game. Some o' 'em were ugly drunk, and weren't very particular in their language. Himself the dealer raked in a big stack o' tons off'n the pack, what had turned up a loser. One o' the teamsters, a big bullyin' cuss, swore he had a copper on the stack an' his bet had won instead of losin'. Jim quietly remarked that he very rarely made mistakes, but that Sunday he had this time, an' if the gentleman was sure he was right he would pay the bet, at the same time pleasantly handin' over the two stacks. This made the ugly teamster think Jim was afraid of him an' his gang set an' smart to blow 'em a d--d gamble before 'em smart enough to steal from him right before his face 'n' eyes. Jim turned his box over, told the players to keep their eyes on their chips, and says quiet but solid like:

"Well, sir, expected to see the hull top o' Jim's head blowed off, but the teamster, makin' 'st one faint motion for his shooter, caught the dealer's eye, slowly passed his chips over, took his stuff, and skipped out. I tell ye it took nerve to do a thing like that to an ugly, drunken teamster, surrounded by a gang o' 'em chums."

"I should say so," I remarked; "but who is this Jim that you praise so highly?"

"Bless me! Didn't I tell you who he was? Jim Farley, now United States senator from California!"

SPIDERS.

A Naturalist's Observations Concerning Their Power of Discerning Friend from Foe.

Exchange.

It is a well known fact that spiders have power of discrimination, and are able to distinguish between friends and foes--approaching those whom they have found to be friendly, while avoiding strangers. One lady succeeded so well in taming spiders to recognize her that they came down to be fed when she entered the room where they were kept. Dr. Moschlen, of Leipzig, relates that in Oederwitz, where he lived for a time, he noticed one day in a rather dark corner of the ante-room a tolerably large spider's web, in which a well-fed spider had made his home. As he sat at the table opening early and late watching for some fly
