

CRITICISING THE DEAD.

Seaman Noros Gives His Views Concerning the Jeannette Expedition.

Lieut. Danenhower Appears as a Reluctant Witness.

Seaman Noros was cross-examined at length by the Jeannette investigating committee yesterday. He said that Capt. De Long was usually the last one to be served with food at meals. He insisted that Melville might have gone earlier than he did in search of De Long. When witness left De Long's party Collins was in much better physical condition than De Long, but he was not surprised that the captain outlived Collins because he had more comforts. A half tent was put up to shelter him. Nindeman dressed him and cared for him, and Alexis was always by with a skin blanket to throw over him. Witness and De Long were both aware that there were settlements on the Siberian mainland directly south of the place where the ship was lost. It had been talked on board the ship that it would have been better to go back and winter in St. Lawrence bay than put the ship into the ice. Witness had seen Danenhower hoarding food and heard him say that if the worst came he intended to leave the party and escape on his own account.

Upon being asked whether there was anything else that he would like to testify to, the witness asked that the ladies leave the room, while he should repeat certain above and indecent words addressed to him on one occasion by Mr. Melville. The request was granted and the language was repeated to the committee.

Witness said he had volunteered, although sick, to guide Melville on his first journey north in search of De Long's party, but Melville said it would take too many dogs to carry him. He thought if he had gone they would have found De Long's party then, but members would probably have been dead.

Lieut. Danenhower was then examined. He said Collins did not impress him as being an educated, scientific man, but as a bright man who knew a little of everything, but not much of anything. Witness had signed a statement for De Long in reference to Collins's arrest in 1880. He had not seen it since. Witness said that everything which he told Mr. Jackson, the Herald correspondent, in Siberia, about the expedition was true.

Lieut. Danenhower here said that he was before the committee as a reluctant witness to testify with regard to the conduct of men who were dead. He disclaimed personal interest in the matter or hostility toward any one. He had talked freely with Jackson, but much of the talk had been confidential. Mr. Bennett had telegraphed witness not to "air sordid lies." Jackson had taken an unfair advantage in repeating things told him in confidence. Witness had changed his views about many things since he talked about them to Jackson, for he now saw the circumstances more clearly. He would therefore now modify his statements, but he would not change the opinions which he gave to Jackson then. The published account of his talk with Jackson contained some errors which he had since corrected.

A letter from Jackson to the New York Herald was read to the witness. It purported to contain statements made by witness to Jackson in Siberia. Witness said most of the statements were correct, but denied that he ever said as there reported, "It seems certain that the whole boat reached the Lena proper, and that had the course been pursued a day longer Bulun would have been reached a month or six weeks earlier, and Noros and Nindeman and the captain's party saved."

The witness then related the particulars of the trouble between himself and Capt. De Long. The first unpleasant feeling grew out of the captain's refusal to assign witness to duty on the 24th of August, when witness thought he was perfectly able to work. The captain told witness it was too unfeeling to come to him and complain at such a time. On the second occasion witness protested to the captain against being put in the wheel, but under the command of a staff officer. With all respect to Mr. Melville, witness thought it was risking the lives of the whole boat's crew to put the boat in command of an engineer. The captain replied indignantly that he did not arrange his details of officers to suit witness's convenience, and that it was unfeeling to make such a complaint.

"Did you not tell Mr. Jackson that you had been unjustly treated?" was asked. "I did. I was feeling very bitterly at that time."

"Did you say to Mr. Jackson that you not only considered Mr. Collins's arrest and suspension unjustifiable, but regarded them as a punishment?" "I may have said so. I can neither affirm nor deny positively."

"Did not Mr. Collins do his whole duty on board ship in a proper manner?" "He was continually arguing with the captain about his duty. His duties were not clearly defined before the ship left San Francisco. If they had been there would have been no trouble."

The witness then related in detail the circumstances which led to Mr. Collins's arrest. Mr. Collins showed a spirit of opposition to the captain's directions, and his arrest, witness thought, was the culmination of a long series of little troubles and disagreements. Mr. Collins believed there was a combination of naval officers against him and he was sensitive and morbid on the subject. He always greeted the captain in the morning, but not the other officers, except occasionally the witness. Capt. De Long was not satisfied with Mr. Collins's work. That was one reason why he took his instruments from him.

STARTING A McDONALD BOOM. The Indiana Democratic Association Propose the Name of Joseph E. McDonald for President—Speech by Senator Voorhees.

Ex-Senator McDonald was formally announced as a candidate for the presidency by the Indiana Democratic association of this city at a meeting held last night. Representative Cobb offered the following resolution:

Whereas the name of Hon. Joseph E. McDonald, of Indiana, has been prominently mentioned as a fit and available candidate for the presidency, therefore Resolved by the Indiana Democratic association at Washington, that the resolution, introduced by Joseph E. McDonald a patriot, a statesman, and a democrat who has ever been faithful to his party and his country, and who has distinguished himself by the nomination of Mr. McDonald for the presidency by the democratic national convention would establish harmony in the ranks throughout the country and would result in the success of democratic principles at the approaching presidential election.

Senator Voorhees made a speech in support of the resolution, in which, after reviewing the political situation, he said: "I understand our object is to present to the American people for their highest confidence a distinguished citizen whose character, career and services will meet the requirements I have stated."

"There are many and powerful reasons which conspire to attract the attention and the confidence of the country at this time to Mr. McDonald as a candidate for the presidency. His location is in the center of population, of productive wealth, and of controlling influences. He was born in the ranks of labor. A knowledge of the wants and interests of laboring people was the first lesson he learned in life and it is the most important on a man can learn at any stage of his existence. He entered public life at the mere youth forty years ago, and has been under the blaze of observation and critical discussion ever since. I have been honored with his intimate friendship more than thirty years, and if the faintest trace of a flaw in his integrity or of any unworthy trait in his character has ever been asserted by friend or foe I and you and all of us are yet to learn the fact."

Joseph E. McDonald was never faithless to a trust or duty, and never a man, woman, or child. We, his neighbors at home; we, his Indiana friends and associates; we who stand ready to advance him to the world's highest honor, can say no less than I have said, and we have a right to say that much, because it is the truth.

"I do not stand here to declare that no one but Mr. McDonald at the head of our ticket can carry Indiana in November next. There are other names which I might readily mention, but need not now, and under which victory can be achieved. We will not go to Chicago to claim a nomination in order to save ourselves from defeat at home, but we may not understand the point out the reasons why Mr. McDonald's nomination would make victory more certain in Indiana, while at the same time securing for the whole country an able and safe administrator of affairs."

In concluding Senator Voorhees said: "This movement in behalf of Mr. McDonald is not made at the expense of the harmony of the democratic party, nor of old friendships in Indiana. The current of opinion which is bearing him forward originates outside of his own state, and his friends at home have simply watched its growth and stood ready to endorse him as they have here on this quiet occasion, and as they will do again in the face of the country and of the world on the 8th of July at Chicago."

GEN. BADEAU.

What the Editor of the Cuban Organ in New York Says of Him.

New York, April 17.—Gen. Badeau has proved himself unfit for his position of United States consul general of Cuba in more ways than one," said Mr. E. Robiera, the editor of El Separatista, the Cuban organ, this afternoon. In the month of January the acting consul of Sagua de La Grande, as Mr. Ford the consul, was sick, asked Mr. Badeau in Havana by telegraph why he ought to do in the case of Emilio Nunez, who was on board the American brig Harauaban as one of the crew. The Spanish government asked to have him delivered under the extradition treaty. Gen. Badeau ordered his delivery without consulting the home government, and he was therefore handed over to the Spanish government which court-martialed him for political offenses committed before the extradition treaty was ratified. The case being presented to Secretary Frelinghuysen by Mr. Randall, attorney-at-law of Mr. Nunez, Mr. Frelinghuysen investigated the case thoroughly, and probably hinted to Mr. Badeau that the case would be investigated in congress and he would look badly for him. The case will be brought before congress as soon as the duties of ex-Speaker Randall will allow him, and it will be shown that one of the biggest outrages has been committed with the consent of one of the American representatives abroad.

"With regard to collector Wickers, of Key West, it is not true that he has had illegal connection with the Cuban revolutionary party. In Key West the republican party is governed by a ring which has great influence in Washington. This ring has been trying to oust Col. Wickers for nearly a year, but it cannot do anything without the Cuban vote, which is about 6,000 strong in Key West. Col. Wickers is a favorite with the Cubans, for he has done them various kindnesses, all strictly legitimate. It was necessary therefore to get rid of him in some other way, hence this trumped-up charge of giving assistance to the revolutionists."

Fears of a Freshet. LACONIA, N. H., April 17.—Much excitement prevails here over the probability of the Lake company's dam at Lake village giving way, the result of which would be a serious flood in Laconia. The water in Lake Winnepiscaukee is higher than since 1858, and one abutment at Lake village has moved three inches to-day, and the Winnepiscaukee river is higher than for many years. If the dam gives way at Lake village there is no doubt that every dam and bridge on the stream to Frankfort will be swept away.

BALTIMORE, April 17.—At the session of the Baltimore Presbytery to-day the following delegates to the general assembly of the Presbyterian church at Saratoga in May were elected: Revs. George D.
