TO THE MAYOR AND TRUSTEES OF THIBODAUX. Gentlemen—The committee on improvements would respectfully report, that the banquets, streets and bridges in the Corporation of Thibodaux are generally in bad order, but as there is a scarcity of money in the Treasury, we would recommend that the first funds arising may be appropriated: first—to repair the bridges generally in the town, particularly those on Canal street; secondly—the levee on Jackson street, opposite Mr. Bruff's store, and thirdly—the bridge at the foot of Jackson street, leading into Terrebonne.

Other works may be postponed but these should be attended to in the shortest possible delay.

A PICTURE OF ROYAL LIFE.

From a late English paper, we gather the annexed account of the daily life of Queen Victoria, and the manner in which she disposes of her time.

Queen Victoria rises at half-past 6 o'clock in the summer, and half-past 7 in the winter. After the toilet and morning service in the chapel of the palace, she breakfasts. Coffee, bread, butter, eggs, and cold meat constitute her usual repast. One or two ladies in waiting, and an equerry have the privilege of partaking the morning meal with the royal family. Breakfast over, the Queen sallies forth to walk on the slopes of Windsor, or in the garden of the palace, and generally visits, when at Windsor, the farmer or aviary, looking at her horses and examining her aquarium.

Re-entering her dwelling, she goes into the nursery, or the rooms in which the princess or princesses are going through their studies; then glancing at the Times and the Morning Post, she enters the library and receives the Master of the Household, and transacts the business of the Kingdom.

The public affairs of the nation at an end, the Queen receives visitors, who have been honored with her "commands" to attend at the palace. Among the latter are the artists and publishers, who have rare and novel works to show her Majesty, or her likeness to take; persons entrusted with presents for her aviary; foreigners with special introductions from their own sovereigns, tradesmen, with articles which the Queen is desirous of purchasing, and so forth.

After these folks have been dismissed, the royal family take their lunch, at which the Queen eats and drinks heartily. The horses and carriage are then brought to the door, and Her Majesty either rides or drives out for three or four hours, frequently taking the opportunity of visiting some of the nobility, the Duches of Inverness, or even—in the country—poor but worthy people who are confined by sickness. Her Majesty's kindness to the suffering of her own sex is proverbial. It is on record that when Mrs. Warner, a tragic actress of excellent character, was ill of a disease which ultimately carried her to the grave, the Queen sent a carriage every day that she might have the advantage of pure air. On her return home the Queen spends an hour in her private boudoir or library, and then dresses for dinner.

A profound silence reigns throughout the meal, only broken by the voice of the Queen, addressing herself to some one or other of the guests, who are expected to limit themselves to a direct reply. General conversation is carried on in whispers only. A great variety of wines are drunk at the royal table, the Queen confining herself to German (Rhine) wine.

After dinner the party adjourns to the drawing rooms and there the Queen casts aside all ceremony, and gives herself up to innocent pleasure and the promotion of the enjoyment of her guests and family.

THE SOUTH.

We reprint from The Tribune a very interesting letter addressed to the editor of that journal by Mr. B. A. Alston of Georgia.

The writer is evidently a sensible, fair minded and well informed gentleman. He describes in plain and many language the real condition of the South, its deplorable destitution, and the earnest desire of all its people to do all which men who still retain their own self-respect can do to propitiate and please their conquerors, and with earnest simplicity he appeals to the dominant States to believe, and to act as if they believed, that the people of the South have universally abandoned the doctrine of secession and acquiesced in the perpetual abolition of slavery, and that they are striving each with the other to restore peace and harmony and to carve out of the future some consolation for the past.

We do not think that any right thinking Northern man, who shall read the truthful and touching account that he gives of the heroic fortitude with which, in the midst of the desolation which broods over their once lovely and abundant country, the man and the gentle women of the South are accepting their hard fate, and laboring as they have never labored before to earn their daily bread, and to rebuild and restore their ruined homes and temples, will have it in his heart to pursue then any longer with his vengeance, or to drive them to utter ruin and despair by any further efforts to humiliate and degrade them.

We have ourselves conversed frequently, in the last few days, with a well-known citizen of Virginia, who was a distinguished representative from that State in the Confederate Congress. He has, within the last four months, traveled extensively in Virginia, the Carolinas and Georgia, and he fully confirms the statement of Mr. Alston as to the perfect universal and absolute submission of the people of those State to the Federal authority, and of their unfeigned anxiety to do all that the people of the North can fairly ask them to do, to demonstrate the loyalty and good faith with which they have retained their allegiance to the Government of the United States.—New York Daily News.

Mr. DENNETT RELEASED.—Our citizens will be pleased to learn that Mr. Daniel Dennett, editor of the Planters, (Franklin) Banner, has been released from arrest by order of Gen. Canby. Gov. Wells, we are informed, called upon the General and laid the facts of the case before him, and an order for Mr. Dennett's enlargement was at once telegraphed to the military commandant of the post of Franklin. This is another evidence of the determination of Gen. Canby to deal justly with the people of Louisiana, and prevent encroachment upon their rights and liberties by his subordinates.—Daily True Delta.

A fellow up the country was fined for kicking Alexander Barn. He said it was a devil of a free country where a man dare not throw his boot again the gable end of a Barn.
