REBELS HAVE DESTROYED BRIDGES.

Gen. MacArthur's Column Had Advanced Beyond the Point of Retreat—The Filipino Troops Had Retreated—The Imprecated Shelling of Zamboanga.

Manila, March 27, 11:25 p. m.—Gen. MacArthur's column advanced beyond the point of retreat and morning of Monday, the next station beyond Polo. After reconnoitering his front, he proceeded along the railroad in the afternoon towards Malolos. At the statement of the 23 prisoners captured today is true, the main body of the enemy has retreated to Malolos.

No More Trenches. But there are no more trenches to be encountered, although over thirty villages, including the larger settlements of Iloilo and Zamboanga.

Some of the battles of the civil war lasted many days, notably the battle of the Wilderness and the fighting about Richmond.

In speaking of the elements of endurance Gen. Sherman said yesterday that he had gone for several days in the morning of the fighting around the mouth of the river, and the fighting about Richmond.

The Shelling of Zamboanga. The shelling of Zamboanga was not coordinated. The turret ship Monadnock anchored of the town, and the insurgents, established by the long range of the warships on guard duty, opened fire on her with muskets, with the result that one man was killed and three more wounded.

An Exciting Experience. The Washington regiment had an exciting experience and displayed much gallantry.

SEVENTY-TWO HOURS' FIGHT.

Where Do the Rebels Get Their Supplies—More Troops for the Philippines—The Casualties.

Washington, March 28.—The duration of the battle outside of Manila is beginning to attract the attention of army strategists, as it is a very important element in determining the strength of the men, the supplies of ammunition and stores and the spirit of the army. The first blow was struck before daybreak last Saturday, and the fighting continued all that day, again on Sunday, and now on Monday.

The reports show little night fighting, except in repelling an insurgent attack Saturday night.

Seventy-Two Hours of Fighting. With yesterday the fight in Manila lasted 72 hours. Judged by the standards of great battles, such as Waterloo, Bismarck and others mentioned by army authorities, this is a long and intensely arduous engagement.

But the fighting about Manila is quite different from the standards of civilized armies, as it is a running battle, with only occasional lulls in the fighting, and only occasional lulls in the fighting.

Some of the battles of the civil war lasted many days, notably the battle of the Wilderness and the fighting about Richmond.

In speaking of the elements of endurance Gen. Sherman said yesterday that he had gone for several days in the morning of the fighting around the mouth of the river, and the fighting about Richmond.

GETTING NEAR MALOCOS.

Gen. MacArthur's Advance Within Six Miles of Malolos, the Insurgent Headquarters.

Manila, March 27.—MacArthur's advance guard reached Bulacan, six miles south of Malolos, this evening and made a reconnaissance.

They found the city partly burned, and the fire seemed to be confined to the lower portion of the place, the most valuable residences and business houses remaining intact.

Bulacan is poorly defended, our reports report, and the town probably will be taken to-morrow.

After the fight today at Manila, Gen. Harrison G. Otis' brigade occupied the town. The main body of the army is camped there to-night, but Gen. Hale's brigade rested on the other side of the river, serving as a rear guard.

MacArthur's battery shelled the insurgent trenches opposite Pasig today, and Malibon-Lawton's command, stretching from Paramara to Pasig, southeast of Manila, was kept busy in disposition of insurgent skirmishers.

Paramara is in flames, having suffered severely from the bombardment by the Monadnock, but the town is held by the rebels and the exact situation there can not be determined at this time.

Getting Close to Malolos. Manila, Tuesday, March 28.—Cooperating with the army, the armed garrison of Malolos at daylight this morning and is now shelling the insurgent position there. Three Americans at this writing have been wounded.

MacArthur's division crossed the Manila river on a pontoon bridge and is now advancing.

Heavy fighting is expected this afternoon.

During the night we sustained an attack at Manila.

The insurgents were repulsed with severe losses. But five of our men were killed in the engagement and 14 were wounded.

Later the insurgent chief, Garcia, came down from Dagupan by train with 1,000 riflemen and 4,000 bolomen and took positions near Manila.

The South Dakota regiment and the Third artillery, acting as infantry, were thrown forward to meet the attack. The South Dakota troops charged brilliantly across the open ground on the east of the railway to the edge of the jungle and lost ten killed and 11 wounded, including three lieutenants.

The Third artillery, on the right of the railroad, charged splendidly and set nine men wounded, two mortally. The insurgent position was carried, and we took 15 prisoners.

Most of the river, insurgents in a trench offered stubborn resistance. Lieut. Critchlow, with two guns of the 1st light battery, and Davis with a new pistol forced 30 rebels to surrender at close quarters—100 yards.

The remainder of the insurgents engaged with severe losses. We counted 80 of the enemy's dead.

MacArthur's command is now moving into Bulacan, the rebels, however, resisting doggedly.
