is saved, by not wetting the bricks. Too much the disposition, and to injure the temper. mortar is often used.

Those for whom buildings are erected, particularly in the city of New-York, in general, are as ignorant as children, of what constitutes the difference between good and poor walls. Placing perfect confidence in masons, carpenters, builders -as they do in lawyers and other professional men, they get it for a little less money, and a very

Another fault is, in making mortar of loam or quicksand, (common in some places,) instead of clean and coarse sand.

One part of quick stone lime, and five parts of clean coarse sand, will make good mortar for brick or stone walls.

The masons object to much sand and little lime, because the mortar will be short and crumbly when used, particularly the over-head ceiling, but when so made and put on, it will be twice as hard as if otherwise made. The loam and more for plastering ceilings. The quantity of lime wanted, is merely to fill interstices, and make of the sand a solid body, for strength.

When masons want a winter's job, they will tell you that the mortar will freeze dry, and be as good as when laid in summer. Such masons if honest, are not philosophers, nor will philosophers believe and employ them.

In the March number of the Cultivator, it is asked by a subscriber, "What is the best method known among our builders and mechanics, of protecting north-east brick walls, and generally, of keeping stone and brick walls dry." Hard burnt bricks, called clinkers, will not absorb water. If north-east walls are made of such, or covered with boards, water cannot penetrate them. But few persons understand the difference in the quality of bricks. Street pavements made of clinker bricks, will last an age and be dry, except while

Stone walls are liable to be wet, by condensing moisture from the air, when the atmosphere changes suddenly to a warmer temperature. DAVID TOMLINSO. .. Respectfully,

From the Cultivator.

CURING HAMS.

Hanover, Michigan, March 7, 1839. Sir-Having had the perusal of your valuable paper from the commencement, I beg leave to present to the public, through its columns, my manner of preserving hams. I turn my barrel over a pan, or kettle, in which I burn hard wood, (commonly hickory or maple,) for seven or nine days; keeping a little water on the head of the barrel, to prevent it from drying. I then pack 200 weight of ham in my barrel, and prepare a pickle, by putting six gallons of water into a boiler, with twelve pounds of salt, twelve ounces of salt-petre. and two quarts of good molasses; this I stir sufficient to dissolve the salt, &c. and let it boil, and skim it. I then let it cool, and pour it on my ham, and in one week I have smoked ham, very tender. and an excellent flavor, and well smoked. When the weather becomes some warm, there will a scum rise on the pickle; by keeping my ham under the pickle, it will keep the year round.

N. B. It is better to have a good white oak barrel than any other. Try it, and if you ever have had meat smoked earlier after killing, and more palatable, please inform the public through the columns of your paper, and oblige a subscriber. H. FOWLER. Yours, &c.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR CALOMEL.

THE proprietors of this article, after protracted and expensive research, believe they have obtained from the vegetable kingdom, a safe and certain substitute for calomel; at least, so far as calomel exerts any beneficial effects upon the human system; an article free from all substances roductive of disastrous consequences.

The action of this medicine upon the constitution is universal; no part of the system escaping its influence. It is, however, upon the organs of secretion and excretion, that its great power is particularly manifested. From this, it will be seen to have a direct effect upon the biliary organs, and to be peculiarly adapted to the treatment of billious fevers, and other diseases, in which a torpidity or congestion of the liver and portal circle pravail. It is admissible in all cases, where it is necessary to cleanse the stomach and bowels. It removes obstruction, and excites a quick and healthy action of the liver and other glandular viscara of the abdomen. Being diffusable in its operation, it produces a free circulation in the vessels on the surface of the body, accompanied by a gentle perspiration. It does not exhaust like drastic purges; still, its action is more universal, and it may be often repeated, not merely with safety, but with great benefit. This becomes indispensably necessary in cases of long standing; for in them in tense temporary impressions made by strong medicines, selflom, if ever, do good, but tend to injure the stamina of the constitution. It is cleansing and purifying to the system, acts in perfect barmony with the known laws of life, and is undoubtedly, one of the most valuable articles ever offered for public trial and inspection. This medicine may be had at Apothecaries' Hall, Main street, one door above 5th street, Cincinnati: and also of the
