Etiquette of Church Wedding. In society the father and mother of the bride to be assume, with few exceptions, all the costs and responsibility in connection with the celebration of her wedding. These include the engraving, addressing and posting of invitations or announcement cards, the music and flowers and awning at the church, the carriages that convey the bride and bridesmaids to the church, the reception or breakfast following the church ceremony and, of course, the bride's trousseau.

The invitations to the ceremony in church should be sent out at least three weeks in advance, and in the same envelope are inclosed the church card and the cards of invitation to the more or less limited number of guests who are asked to the wedding breakfast or reception. If the invitation includes a breakfast a response should be sent at once; if only a reception no reply is necessary. If you do not go send cards as you would to any other reception.

If the wedding be a small private one, to which only intimate friends are invited, announcement cards should be sent on the day of the wedding to all who have not been invited. For a large church wedding invitations to the church are usually sent to all the acquaintances of the respective families and reception cards inclosed in those to friends only.

The correct form for a wedding invitation is: Mr. and Mrs. Henry George Stuart request the honor of Mr. and Mrs. James Seymour Welch's presence at the marriage of their daughter Mary Lane to Mr. William Alden Smith on Tuesday, the ninth day of November, at twelve o'clock, at the Second Congregational church, Chicago, Illinois.

The invitation should be folded once and inclosed in one envelope only. The announcement usually follows this wording and arrangement: Mr. and Mrs. Henry George Stuart announce the marriage of their daughter Mary to Mr. William Alden Smith on Tuesday, the ninth day of November, at twelve o'clock, at the Second Congregational church, Chicago, Illinois.

This is folded once and inclosed in an envelope on which the name only is placed. This envelope is placed in another one bearing both the name and address.

In acknowledging the presents the bride should write personal notes to the senders as the gifts arrive. It is customary for the bride to give a luncheon to the bridesmaids at her house a week before the wedding, but occasionally a fashionable cafe or hotel is selected, and instead of a luncheon, if she prefers she may give a dinner and ask both bridesmaids and ushers. The latter, however, should always take place at the bride's house.

In town the bride does not provide carriages except for the bridesmaids, who meet at her house and go from there to the church, while the bride herself goes to the church with her father or with her nearest male relative who is to give her away. The bridesmaids precede the bride to the church by a few moments, meeting her in the vestibule, where the bridal procession is formed. The church should be opened a little more than half an hour before the ceremony, at which time the ushers should be on hand to seat the guests. The organist should begin to play about half an hour before the ceremony itself.

The third finger of the left hand glove of the bride should be ripped its entire length so that the ring can easily be slipped upon it. Just before the bridal procession starts up the aisle the two head ushers stretch white satin ribbons four inches in width from the first to the last, and a moment before the procession starts from the door the groom and the best man emerge from the vestry and take their places at the altar to await the bride.

Points to Remember. When boarding a car the man allows the woman to precede him, assisting her gently, but firmly.

In leaving the car the man precedes the woman, that he may offer her his assistance in alighting.

When a man and woman meet on the street and enter the car together the woman pays her own fare.

If she is compelled to occupy the last vacant seat the man stands immediately in front of her or as near as possible.

If a fellow passenger moves on to make room for the man beside the woman he is escorting he lifts his hat in recognition of the courtesy.

Mourning Paper. Formerly a most elaborate etiquette regulated the width of the black border requisite on the note paper used by a widow, a parent, a sister, a daughter, etc. Nowadays a black border matching in width what is used on her cards is correct for the period of mourning. As the mourning is lightened the black border becomes narrower, but it is appropriate for very narrow edge to be used until the mourning dress is discarded. One who dresses in light mourning for some one who is not a very near relative may use paper with the narrowest border that comes.

DOG NOTICE! It is hereby ordered that any person owning a dog or dogs (in the city of Richmond) shall quarantine or muzzle the same for a period of 30 days from the date of this order.

Provided this shall not apply to dogs being led by chain or leash upon the public highways of the city.
